WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY ABOUT THE—

STARR KIDNEY PAD.

Treatment by Absorption has for some time been recognized by Medical Men to be the most simple and effectual means of conveying to diseased organs 'Curatives,' but in cases of Kidney Disease, and Complaints attending thereon, successful treatment was practicably impossible until the introduction of the Starr Kidney Pad. It costs less than a single prescription and is immeasurably more decisive and effectual than any quantity of internal Medicinal dosing. Worn immediately over the seat of disease, its curative properties become absorbed by the diseased and enfeebled organs, continuously and directly, as required insure in return their healthy action and original vigour. It is comfortable to the patient and pleasant in its effects, and cures when nothing else can. The Starr Kidney Pad accomplishes positive, decisive results. A more valuable discovery as a true remedy for Kidney Diseases was never made. —Medical Gazette.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

THE NAPANEE STAGE RUN INTO BY A G. T. R. TRAIN.

Two Ladies Killed—Particulars of the Accident—The Inquest.

The village of Cataraqui, three miles north-west of Kingston, was in a great state of excitement on Monday last. Lying in a large house on the Kingston and Napanee road, at the intersection of the Sydenham road, was the body of Isaac Powley, killed by engine No. 14 of the Grand Trunk Railway on Saturday last. The villagers lamentingly discussed this accident when the horrible rumor spread that a more terrible work of destruction had been accomplished. The people were thrown into a ferment of excitement, and, hastening to the Grand Trunk crossing, beheld a fearful sight. The Napanee and Kingston stage was a complete wreck, and the bodies of two women, mangled and in tattered garments, were being tenderly picked up and conveyed to houses in the immediate vicinity. Death had come to one instantaneously ; in another case the spark of life was but feebly burning. A lady, with a broken arm and other injuries, lay in a heap on the roadside. The train that had caused the great fatality was slowly backing up to the scene. Four passengers with blanched faces contemplated the catastrophe and silently thanked heaven for their own preservation. Theannouncement, following so soon the accident of Saturday,

PRODUCED A PROFOUND SENSATION.

People whose friends were on the stage ran frantically about endeavouring to learn the details of the affair. Medical men and journalists hastened as rapidly as horses could take them to the place of death. The Whig reporter was first on the ground. In approaching the Grand Trunk line much care was required, as there was no telling where the trains were. Passing the toll gate a long level stretch was passed, a somewhat sharp curve made in the road, and the railway loomed up. Looking eastward a comparatively good view could be had of the railway, but westward a train had to be near in order to be seen. A large stone house, occupied by Mr. Black, obstructs the outlook until the track is almost reached up a short, sharp grade. Here the accident occurred.

THE STAGE STARTS WEST.

Mr. Storms as soon as possible started to walk to Kingston, but meeting a gentleman en route to Odessa started back and was intercepted at Cataraqui by the reporters. He did not know that the train was upon the stage as he could not see out of the windows. He could give no details of the accident and could not tell whether the horses became unmanageable or not. He had a Saratoga trunk and two valises on the back of the stage. Only small pieces of the boxes could be picked up. Everything breakable was destroyed. The young man's clothing and books were strewn along the line of the railway and he had consideruble trouble to collect them. Fred. Warner's goods were also distributed along the track. Mr. Warner and the driver of the stage were taken on to Odessa.

WAITING FOR A PASSENGER.

Calvin Wartman of Glenvale, a brother in-law of Mrs. Wartman, had driven that lady to Kingston in the morning She was not ready to start for home with him and as he had business in Cataraqui he decided to go ahead and, and after completing his work, await her arrival on the stage. He was at Mr. Purdy's, a short distance beyond the track, and got the first intimation of the accident when the engine gave forth those shrieking whistles denoting danger. He rushed to the door and was horrified at the sight that met his gaze. He at once went to his sister-in-law's rescue. He says he heard no whistling before that indicating the approach of a train.

Mr. David Nichol was soon on hand and helped to pick up Mrs. Armitage. A buffalo robe was secured and upon this she was laid and carried to the Town Hall, from thence to the vaults in the Cataraqui Cemetery, where they remained until her friends arrived. She has a son living near Odessa.

Much grief was expressed of Mrs. Gorrie's death. She leaves an interesting family of six children to mourn her loss. Her child was miraculously saved. Dr. Bigham thinks the woman's spine was injured. She was insensible from the time of the accident until death came. Her body was removed to her late room before we left the village. Dr. W. H. Henderson was summoned to wait upon her but he reached her side too late.

Dr. Sullivan was on hand and, with Dr. Bigham, dressed the wounds of Mrs. Wartman, who suffered intensely. Mrs. Wartman had an arm broken as well as her thigh injured. She was also internally injured.

PRODUCED A PROFOUND SENSATION.

People whose friends were on the stage ran frantically about endeavouring to learn the details of the affair. Medical men and journalists hastened as rapidly as horses could take them to the place of death. The Whig reporter was first on the ground. In approaching the Grand Trunk line much care was required, as there was no telling where the trains were. Looking eastward a comparatively good view could be had of the railway, but westward a train had to be near in order to be seen. A large stone house, occupied by Mr. Black, obstructs the outlook until the track is almost reached up a short, sharp grade. Here the accident occurred.

THE STAGE STARTS WEST.

Monday afternoon, at the usual hour, the stage running from Kingston to Napanee left the City Hotel. It carried four passengers: Mrs. Armitage, widow, aged between 75 or 80 years, and residing near Odessa, sat in the back seat of the vehicle. Mrs. Henry Wartman, of Glenvale, aged between 35 or 40 years, sat immediately in front of Mrs. Armitage. Fred. Warner, of Wilton. and Doulas Storms, of Odessa, medical students, sat in the seat with their backs to the driver. These were the positions of the passengers when the stage left the hotel. At D. A. Garbutt's, on Princess street, Dan Shea, the driver, halted and took aboard Mrs. Joseph Gorrie and her 12 year old daughter, who lived beyond Cataraqui.

Mrs. Gorrie was a sister of Mrs. Garbutt, and had come to the city in the morning in the same stage. She sat in the stage beside Mrs. Wartman, in the first seat facing the driver. The little girl sat in the seat facing her mother and beside her Miss Purcell of Odessa, who also entered the stage at Garbutt's The stage, we might here state, was long and enclosed and finely painted. It had four seats, two upon which the passengers faced the back and two upon which their faces were forward. There were several windows. In a sheltered place in front the driver sat. Upon the rack were numerous trucks and valises strapped on. Cracking his whip the driver started upon the journey which proved so disastrous. The windows were so covered with frost that those inside could not see out. The passengers conversed freely and seemed to enjoy the ride.

STRUCK BY AN ENGINE.

Cataraqui crossing was about reached when the driver, it is said, heard the whistle of an approaching train. This startled the horses and they dashed ahead. They seemed to have got beyond control of the driver. An engine from the west, and a long train of cars, came thundering along at a rapid rate so as to successfully mount the grade this side of the Kingston depot. The stage horses, more alarmed, dashed forward, crossing the track. The driver was about to breathe freely again when the train rushed upon the stage. Engine No. 37 caught the back part of the conveyance and in a moment rushed to the door and was horrified at the sight that met his gaze. He at once went to his sister-in-law's rescue. He says he heard no whistling before that indicating the approach of a train.

Mr. David Nichol was soon on hand and helped to pick up Mrs. Armitage. A buffalo robe was secured and upon this she was laid and carried to the Town Hall, from thence to the vaults in the Cataraqui Cemetery, where they remained until her friends arrived. She has a son living near Odessa.

Much grief was expressed of Mrs. Gorrie's death. She leaves an interesting family of six children to mourn her loss. Her child was miraculously saved. Dr. Bigham thinks the woman's spine was injured. She was insensible from the time of the accident until death came. Her body was removed to her late room before we left the village. Dr. W. H. Henderson was summoned to wait upon her but he reached her side too late.

Dr. Sullivan was on hand and, with Dr. Bigham, dressed the wounds of Mrs. Wartman, who suffered intensely. Mrs. Wartman had an arm broken as well as her thigh injured. She was also internally injured.

THE PRECAUTIONS USUALLY TAKEN.

The engineer of the train says he took the usual precautions to alarm by whistling anyone at the crossing of the approaching train. We made enquiries at the village and learned that sometimes the trains give the customary alarm, sometimes they do not. The whistling was frequently not given in time, and before the sound died away the trains were upon the crossing. The place is certainly very dangerous and it is earnestly to be hoped that the Government will interfere and prevent, if possible, further loss of life. Gates are essentially necessary and must be put on at once. It was but 200 yards hence that Mr. Powley was killed on Saturday.

STAGE DRIVER'S STORY.

Dan Shea, the driver of the stage, was taken ill on his way to Odessa, where he expected to meet the proprietor of the stage line, Mr. Finkle. Dan is now confined to bed in Odessa, suffering from severe injuries in the back. He says, we believe, that he did not see the train until he was close to the track. The horses then became unmanageable.

NOTES.

Immediately behind the stage, near Cataraqui, was a funeral procession. The drivers of the various cabs say they saw the train and the stage going ahead, and thought the horses must be running away. There was a mighty rush, and then a cloud of splintered wood, clothing, trunks, etc. The event was a highly sensational one.

Dr. Saunders, coroner, arrived about 7 o'clock and decided to hold an inquest, when the whole question of responsibility will be settled. The jury were summoned to assemble at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The conduct of the driver, the precautions of the engineer to avoid accident, and the question of gates will be discussed.

ACCIDENTS AT THE CROSSING.

There have been numerous accidents at the Cataraqui crossing since the railroad was opened. Some years ago the hind wheel of a waggon, driven by Joseph Northmore, was taken off by a train. Last year the horse of David Nicol was killed by an engine, and four persons left sitting in the ve-

There were several windows. In a sheltered place in front the driver sat. Upon the rack were numerous trucks and valises strapped on. Cracking his whip the driver started upon the journey which proved so disastrous. The windows were so covered with frost that those inside could not see out. The passengers conversed freely and seemed to enjoy the ride.

STRUCK BY AN ENGINE.

Cataraqui crossing was about reached when the driver, it is said, heard the whistle of an approaching train. This startled the horses and they dashed ahead. They seemed to have got beyond control of the driver. An engine from the west, and a long train of cars, came thundering along at a rapid rate so as to successfully mount the grade this side of the Kingston depot. The stage horses, more alarmed, dashed forward, crossing the track. The driver was about to breathe freely again when the train rushed upon the stage. Engine No. 37 caught the back part of the conveyance and in a moment it was shattered to fragments. Death had come swiftly to at least two persons. The front part of the stage was left intact, but that part from the middle to the back was carried away in splinters along the track. The great Mogul had lifted the women occupying the two back seats and hurled them a great distance. Mrs. Armitage fell in the ditch in a pool of water, 41 yards away. The hub of one of the back wheels lay upon her body. She was quite dead. Her and her face covered with blood. Near her, friends found a portion of the stage roof. Mrs. Gorrie was carried 18 yards from where the stage was struck and also lay in a heap in the ditch. She was alive but fatally wounded. Of course she was picked up at once and taken to Mr. Black's, where she died at 6.30 o'clock. Mrs. Wartman was cast close to the cattle guard, severely injured. As soon as possible she, too, was taken to Mr. Black's and afterwards transferred to the residence of Dr. Bigham, who was quickly at the scene. Mrs. Gorrie's little girl and Miss Purcell escaped uninjured and extricated themselves from the wreck as soon as possible. The two medical students in the stage, which was reversed by the force of the blow, were propelled through the windows, one lighting on each side of the vehicle. They came out of the ruin unscathed. Dan Shea, the driver, was considerably hurt, being thrown upon the sidewalk. Notwithstanding his suffering he heroically rushed to the heads of the horses, which were prancing and shivering on the road, and prevented them from running away.

OUT THROUGH A WINDOW.

Douglas Storms, a medico, was seen. He said the first he knew of the accident was when he was shot through the window. He picked himself up, and, gathering his wits, began to investigate the matter. He rushed to Mrs. Armitage's side, but found her dead. Mrs. Gorrie's pulse was feebly beating. He helped to carry her into Mr. Black's house. did not see the train until he was close to the track. The horses then became unmanageable.

ACCIDENTS AT THE CROSSING.

There have been numerous accidents at the Cataraqui crossing since the railroad was opened. Some years ago the hind wheel of a waggon, driven by Joseph Northmore, was taken off by a train. Last year the horse of David Nicol was killed by an engine, and four persons left sitting in the vehicle to which was attached. A young man while returning to Kingston was struck by the train and instantly killed. A man named Woodhouse, walking on the track, was killed. Johnson Day narrowly escaped. He crossed the track just in the nick of time. Had he been without a whip and failed to strike the horse he would have been killed. Thos. Clyde's horses were startled by the whistle of an engine and raced up to the railway. None was killed but several sons were injured, one severely. Miss Clyde was caught on the connecting rod between the driving wheels and thus carried a long distance up the track. A section of her dress was carried to Kingston station.

THE INQUEST.

The Town Hall at Cataraqui was filled Tuesday afternoon with those who desired to hear the evidence to be presented at the inquest, touching the death of Mrs. Armitage, of Ernesttown, which opened at two o'clock before Coroner Saunders. The inquiry was continued until the sun went down and then, after the lights were lighted, men crowded around the desk where the evidence was inscribed and listened intently. Interest centred in the question as to whether the Grand Trunk engineer had caused a proper alarm. The jury was composed of a very intelligent class of farmers as follows:—David Nicol, foreman; David Purdy, Andrew Wallace, William Martin, John Porter, John McKim, John Simpson, Samuel Ely, William Ely, Arthur Shewell, Wm. Hyland, James Hyland, Chas. Purdy, Wellington Purdy, Joseph L. Haycock, Elward Cooke, Osborn McMichael and Albert McMichael.

J. McIntyre, Q. C., represented H. Finkle, proprietor of the stage line; W. W. Pope, of Belleville, represented the Grand Trunk Company.

Dr. Saunders made a short address in which he asked the jury to ascertain whether the stage driver and engineer of the train had taken proper precautions to prevent after it crossed the roa

Douglass Storms, of Odessa, a medical student, testified that he was on the stage at the time of the accident. His first intimation of the affair was when the stage was going to pieces and when he was being propelled through the side. He was not thrown violently out, and was, therefore, unhurt. He did not hear the train approaching. He stated the position of matters as he remembered them. Mrs Wartman and Mrs. Gorrie lay close together, and greatly injured. Mrs. Armitage fell further on. He found her in a pool of water in the ditch, having broken through the ice. A hind wheel, a spring and a paring and a part of an axel rested upon her. These were removed. He felt her pulse and found that she was dead. The wounded ladies were carried into a house adjacent. Witness did not remember hearing the whistle of the engine blown. After the accident he was so startled and dazed that he could hear nothing. Daniel Shea, the stage driver, was considered a careful man, and knew how to handle his horses. He was quite sober on Monday night. Witness thought the stage was not progressing more than six or seven miles an hour. It was not noticed to slack up before reaching the crossing. The witness named the passengers in the stage and the seats they occupied. He had frequently sat with the stage driver on the outside, and noticed that Shea always looked up and down the track before crossing it. It was less difficult to see a train proceeding eastward than to see one going westward.

A certificate was here admitted from Dr. Beeman to the effect that Daniel Shea was unable to be present. Dr. Beeman said it would be some days before he would be able to appear. He was confined to the house at Odessa.

Dr. Bigham, Cataraqui, testified to having found Mrs. Armitage dead. Daniel Shea was considered a careful and sober driver He considered the crossing was very dangerous, especially when the wind was blowing westward.

Frederick Warner, Wilton, medical student, heard the whistle and saw the engine at the same time. This was when the front wheels of the stage were going off the track. The engine was a short distance away. Wit-

He was a liberal and benevolent man, and, ably assisted by his wife, was particularly solicitous regarding the condition of the poor and destitute. It is said that some 15 or 16 orphans were cared for by Mr. and Mrs. Armitage during their lifetime. Mrs. Armitage was in good health, and the suddenness of her death will be deeply regretted by all who knew her.

CHRISTMAS PASTORAL.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

MY DEAR SIR,—The accompanying pastoral letter has been addressed by the Lord Bishop of Ontario to his Laity. Will you kindly insert it in your next issue so that it may be read by many in this Rural Deanery of Lennox, besides those who attend church on the Sunday before Christmas.

Yours faithfully,
T. BEDFORD-JONES,
Archdeacon and Rural Dean.

Napanee, Dec. 18th, 1883.

To the Laity of the Diocese of Ontario:

MY DEAR BRETHREN.—It has again become my duty to remind you that the Christmas Offerings of our congregations are given to the Clergy, and to bespeak your liberality at the Great Festival.

This custom is in accordance with the Canon of the Synod, which enacts "That the Offertory of the respective congregations throughout the Diocese on Christmas Day of every year shall be devoted to the sole use of the Incumbent of the Church in which the Offertory is made."

At this Sacred Season when religion brings to bear upon us her most powerful influences "to provoke us unto love and good words," let me affectionately ask you "to remember them that are your guides, and have spoken unto you the word of God," and to permit gratitude for a continued prosperity in our country to prompt you to liberal offerings. The Clergy are the last to benefit by commercial prosperity, and yet "if they have sown unto you spiritual things is it a great matter if they shall reap your carnal things."

Wishing you, my Dear Brethren, all the Blessings of the approaching Holy Season,

I remain your faithful Bishop,

SAW THE ENGINE APPROACHING.

Frederick Warner, Wilton, medical student, heard the whistle and saw the engine at the same time. This was when the front wheels of the stage were going off the track. The engine was a short distance away. Witness considered that Shea was a careful man. He noticed no change in the rate at which the stage travelled as the crossing was approached. He had seen Shea drinking in a bar, but he could not tell what he drank. He did not see the driver drinking anything on Monday. Before leaving Kingston witness scratched the frost off the window of the stage so that he could see out. When he observed the engine so close he thought it would strike the vehicle. He had no time to make an alarm. Had the stage driver used the same precaution he would have used he did not think the accident would have occurred. Witness could not tell what precautions the stage driver did take. He could not see him. He did not desire to reflect on the conduct of Shea on the day in question.

OPINION ABOUT THE WHISTLE.

Henry P. Wells, Kingston, testified that he was driving a quarter of a mile behind the stage when the accident occurred. The whistle of the train was heard three times after it crossed the road. Witness did not hear it before. The train was seen on the track coming down. The stage driver was "a steady kind of a fellow." Spirited horses could not be pulled up if the train was not seen until Baker's or Black's houses were reached.

WHAT A FARMER SAW.

W. H. Benjamin, Odessa, farmer, testified that he was driving from Kingston at the time of the accident. When witness saw the train it was about a quarter of a mile from the crossing. He was about 20 rods from the track. He pulled up but the stage went on. Witness heard no whistle and his horse first detected the approach of the train. The whistle sounded a few seconds before it struck the stage. The alarm and the collision were close together. Witness thought the stage driver would stop. He did not see the horses quicken their gait. There was a crash but the collision could not be seen for smoke and steam. The stage driver was a quiet, attentive, sober man. Witness positively declared he did not hear the engine whistle until a moment before the collision. The train was going quite fast. He did not see the stage driver have any trouble with his horses, but he saw nothing to prevent

The following letter from Rev. J. C. Burnelle, of Unionville, Ohio, who twenty years ago was pastor of the M. E. Church of this town, will be read with interest by many who have pleasing recollections of his pastorate here. He evidently has not lost all interest in his former home :—

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—The time for which some friend paid for THE EXPRESS to be sent to me, draws to a close. I cannot let it pass without expressing my great satisfaction with its weekly visits, and making my thanks to the donor as public as the gift. There are many still living in Napanee, doubtless, who will recall my name as once a resident of the village, as it then was, now perhaps a city.

Many have passed the "boundary line." I can see, in THE EXPRESS, the names of but few with whom I was acquainted. New names, new business enterprises, new streets appear. It is easy for me to see that during the last 20 years, Napanee has taken a new lease of life; that she has grown in wealth, activity and enterprise, widened her borders and, indeed, improved (is that the word?) in every way since 1863. Judging from THE EXPRESS and the late election trials, Napanee is following rather closely the example set her by her American neighbors in political shrewdness, chicanery, deception and, I fear, corruption.

THE EXPRESS, so far as I know, was not published when I lived at Napanee. If so, you were in your "swadling bands," and had but commenced to creep. Now you have grown to full manhood, and are able to deal trenchant blows upon any who stand in your way, and you do it. You hit hard sometimes, and I only hope that those who feel the weight of your arm deserve it. Your quill is sharp and you use it sharply. I hope not too unnecessarily so. I read carefully the reported trials of the bribery and corruption in connection with your late election. I was ashamed for old Lennox. The feat feature of political bribery is original with you, I think, and you are welcome to the glory or the shame of it. If I had seen in your, or any other political paper, what appears as matter of evidence, I should have thought it a political canard, simply for effect, and let it pass. But I must confess it looks a little suspicious and very discreditable. As Peter Cartwright once said in a General Conference at Cobourg, "I don't like the phiz of the brat." Doubtless there are many such on both sides. I can't judge,

He did not see the stage driver have any trouble with his horses, but he saw nothing to prevent the stage driver from stopping. He was under the impression that he would have stopped.

IMPORTANT CORROBORATORY EVIDENCE.

William McCammon did not hear the engine whistle until it nearly reached the crossing. The horses were spirited. Once at the Kingston & Pembroke RR. station they became frightened and danced around it. The driver succeeded in holding them in. He was sober on Monday. He had not seen him drunk in two years.

John Murphy, carriage maker, Kingston, saw the train as it came over the hill. He did not hear it whistle until it nearly reached the crossing.

Robert Reid, undertaker, Kingston, who was in the first vehicle in the funeral procession, heard no whistle until the engine about reached the crossing.

Mr. Griffiths, Kingston, testified that he was at Black's. He had driven up with a spirited horse and knowing this listened for a train. He heard the rumble of one. He rushed to his horse's head. The train whistled a short distance from the crossing. He saw the accident and noticed Mrs. Armitage flying before the engine.

The inquest was then adjourned until Friday, at 10 o'clock, when the train employes and Dan Shea will testify.

SKETCH OF MRS. ARMITAGE'S LIFE.

Mrs. Armitage was wife of the late John Armitage, who owned "Maple Grove," in the township of Ernesttown, about two miles south of Odessa. Mr. Armitage came to Canada and settled in the municipality in 1834. He and his friends were in a good position when they came to this country and got a large amount of property. Mr. Armitage first purchased half of lot 37 in the 3rd concession of Ernesttown; he afterwards secured the other half and all of lot 38, thus making an extensive estate. He at once set to work to clear the land, and in time the wilderness became a fruitful field. In 1837 or 1838 he married Miss Annie Guest, daughter of Thos. Guest, of Oxford township, County of Grenville. Mrs. Armitage (the lady killed yesterday) came to Canada when but four years of age. Three children blessed her union. In 1859, Rachel, a daughter aged 17 years, died. John Wesley and

The cat feature of political bribery is original with you, I think, and you are welcome to the glory or the shame of it. If I had seen in your, or any other political paper, what appears as matter of evidence, I should have thought it a political canard, simply for effect, and let it pass. But I must confess it looks a little suspicious and very discreditable. As Peter Cartwright once said in a General Conference at Cobourg, "I don't like the phiz of the brat." Doubtless there are many such on both sides. I can't judge, having seen but one side, and this is apt to give a one-sided judgment.

Bribery at elections, and anywhere in connection with the political franchise, unsettles things and is an effort to undermine and destroy free institutions, and should be (and will be) frowned upon by every lover of his country, never palliated or concealed.

As I shall soon, I suppose, be denied the privilege of reading your weekly issues, I wish you success in every endeavor to uphold the right, and expose and crush out the wrong. May you never be so party-bound as to be party-blind. Herein is danger.

Yours respectfully,

J. C. BURNELLE.

P. S.—I judge from something I saw in THE EXPRESS that you are having good sleighing. Not so here. We have had no snow, not enough to cover the ground. We are enjoying beautiful fall weather. There is no frost in the ground as yet. Just now the thermometer stands 40° above freezing.

A Kingston Scheme to Cut Off Napanee's Trade.

[From the Whig.]

The City Council may be asked next year to endorse a move by which Kingston will be greatly benefitted. We refer to railway connection with Camden, Sheffield and other townships in Lennox and Addington. The Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec R.R. now runs to Tamworth; by building a branch from a point near Harrowsmith to Colebrook, some five miles, a connection can be made with the Kingston & Pembroke R.R. and the trade diverted to Kingston. The Council may be asked, therefore, to submit a by-law granting a bonus towards the building of this branch.

The Directors of the Co-operative Warehousing Co. of Napanee,

Having chosen me as their Manager, I would say to all whom it may concern, that the storage of grain can be obtained on as favorable terms as heretofore, or there will be a purchaser of grain, Mr. A. NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Summary of Foreign Domestic and War Items.

Alderman Meaghe (Parnellite) has been elected Lord Mayor of Dublin.

A Berlin despatch says there are alarming signs of a revival of the recent uprising in Servia.

Father McCarty was stoned at Newry recently, while passing through the Protestant quarter of the town.

It is reported that the Zulu Chief Cetewayo will be restored to power over his tribe under the protection of British troops.

Sixty thousand pounds worth of property was destroyed by the burning of several cotton, hemp, and sugar warehouses in Liverpool recently.

A secret agreement is said to have been concluded between Spain and Germany against "revolutionary eventualities," which has received the adhesion of other monarchies.

A firm in Shanghai holding silk valued at one million pounds has failed or retired. More suspensions are expected, as Chinese banks refuse to lend money until the war-cloud has vanished.

It is said that O'Donnell's frenzy at the conclusion of his trial was due to the fact that he was not allowed to speak. He failed to hear the court registrar when he asked him if he had anything to say.

The Governor of Alsace-Lorraine has annulled the resolutions adopted by the District Diet of Upper Alsace allowing the use of the French language in the debates. The Governor holds that the Diet exceeded its legal powers.

The magistrate at Newry, Ireland, recently forbade the proposed Nationalist torchlight procession in the evening. Large forces of troops and police were sent to the town to preserve order, and were hooted and groaned at by the people.

The latest authentic information from M. de Brazza states that he was at Brazzaville, on the Congo, in excellent health, as were all the members of his party, and that there was no probability of a conflict with either Mr. Stanley's expedition or the natives.

A pastoral from Cardinal McCabe was read in the Catholic churches of Dublin recently, strongly denouncing secret societies, which, it said, seemed to possess a fatal charm for Irishmen, ending generally with the hangman's rope or the infamy of an informer.

Latest advices from Madagascar contradict the recent report that the Malagassy envoys had been strangled. Admiral if the people persevered in their course, avoided crime, and refused to allow themselves to be transported, a good deal would be achieved within a measurable period. The present generation might live to see the Old Land clothed in the garb of freedom under the Irish flag.

Mr. Chamberlain, President of the Board of Trade, speaking at Wolverhampton, said the members of the Government are firmly united. All are pursuing the same general object, and are animated with equal loyalty to the great chief. It is the bounden duty of the liberal party to do its utmost to remove just causes of discontent and disaffection in Ireland; it must no longer tolerate such a sham, fraud, and transparent imposture as the present Irish Parliamentary representative system, where only one in twenty-five has a vote. The perpetuation of this injustice would justify disaffection and give the leaders of the Irish party the strongest arguments for separation, as showing that it was impossible to obtain justice from the British Parliament, and give fresh vigour to the agitation which it is our duty to allay."

Some investigations by M. Thanneur show that South America is rich in woods for engineering purposes. The yandubay is exceedingly hard and durable; the couroupay is also very hard and rich in tannin. The quebracho is, however, more interesting than any, and grows abundantly in the forest of La Plata and Brazil. It resembles oak in the trunk, and is used for railway sleepers, telegraph poles, piles, and so on. It is heavier than water, its specific gravity varying between 1,203 and 1,333. The color, at first, is reddish, like mahogany; but grows darker with time. Being rich in tannin, it is employed for tanning leather in Brazil, and has recently been introduced for that purpose in France. A mixture of one-third of quebracho and two-thirds of ordinary tan gives good results.

Latest advices from Madagascar contradict the recent report that the Malagassy envoys had been strangled. Admiral Galiber, the French commander at Madagascar, expects to march inland in February or March. There is much sickness among the French troops.

At Danville, Pa., Policeman Kennedy attempted to arrest Green Miller, a negro who was beating his wife. Miller resisted, and choked Kennedy. Policeman Williams went to Kennedy's assistance, when Miller bit him several times. Williams finally shot him mortally.

An insurrectionary plot among members of a rifle battalion at Barcelona has been discovered, and several of the officers arrested. The officers of the garrison at Lerida, on the northern frontier of France, have been ordered to sleep in barracks, owing to rumours of an intended rising.

The Marquis of Hartington, Secretary at War, in a speech recently, stated that the British Government had received an intimation from the German Government that it is willing to co-operate with England to protect their subjects and interests in China in the event of war between China and France.

Owing to the attack by the Chinese upon Haidzuong a state of siege has been proclaimed there by Admiral Courbet. Some Annamite Mandarins who connived at the movements of the Chinese have been arrested. Offensive operations by the French are imminent. The health of the troops is excellent.

that it is willing to co-operate with England to protect their subjects and interests in China in the event of war between China and France.

Owing to the attack by the Chinese upon Haidzuong a state of siege has been proclaimed there by Admiral Courbet. Some Annamite Mandarins who connived at the movements of the Chinese have been arrested. Offensive operations by the French are imminent. The health of the troops is excellent.

It is reported that M. Waddington, the French Ambassador at London, has informed Earl Granville that France intends to occupy Bacninh and Sontay to satisfy her honor, but will not engage in war with China, and that after the surrender of these two places France will propose an armistice and ask for English meditation,

A frightful tragedy has caused the greatest sensation at Vienna. Felix von Kuh, sixteen years old, son of the railway director, Ritter von Kuh, and his elder brother loved Fraulein Thorsch, daughter of the well known banker who died in July last leaving 15,000,000 florins. Felix shot himself with a revolver and died immediately.

In the trial of O'Donnell for the murder of Carey, only one witness was called for the defence. The jury after two hours' deliberation returned a verdict of "wilful murder," and the judge passed sentence of death. After the sentence had been pronounced the doomed man broke out into violent curses, and had to be removed from the dock by force.

The result of O'Donnell's trial was eagerly awaited by Irish circles in London, where it was generally expected the verdict would be manslaughter. Some of the League branches have resolved to form committees to memorialize the Home Secretary to commute the sentence. It was thought probable an attempt will be made to bring pressure on the United States Government to intervene for a commutation of the sentence. All the morning papers endorse the verdict in the case of O'Donnell.

Mr. T. D. Sullivan, M.P., referring to the action of the Government in proclaiming Newry, said it had not been the custom of the Nationalists to interfere with Orange celebrations, but that henceforth when Orange meetings were announced the Nationalists would probably hold counter meetings, and thus compel the Government to proclaim both. He attributed the present unhappy state of affairs to the recent tour of Sir Stafford Northcote.

A Dublin despatch says: Archbishop Croke, speaking at Waterford, said after what had been achieved in the last few years by the Irish party in Parliament under their great leader, he had no doubt

Oh, my Back!

Is there a miserable, weakening pain in the small of the back? Is urination painful? Do you have palpitation of the heart? Do strange, indescribable feelings creep up your back and sides? Does the least exertion weary you? Does your urine show brickdust or albuminous deposit? Does any sudden fright cause an intense, sharp pain in the small of your back? Do you have an aching in the groin? Is your memory impaired? Is your breath short? Are there shooting pains about your vitals? Are you becoming dropsical?

These are all symptoms of kidney diseases. Be on your guard against them. If let run it may end in Bright's Disease, which is sure death.

Your best course is to procure at once a bottle of SULPHUR AND IRON BITTERS costing only 50c. It will cure any form of Kidney Complaint, except Bright's Disease, it will relieve the symptoms and defer the evil day sometimes indefinitely.

SULPHUR AND IRON BITTERS is a medicine as harmless as water. The world has not seen its equal as a cure for diseases which attack the Kidneys and for the complaints to which females are alone liable. It is of more value than any medical compound known to the medical faculty.

Important to Ruptured Persons.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost, compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. Ask your druggist for a free book on rupture or send 6 cents for one to the Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Flax-seed.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptoms is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. A Bitter Truth.

There are some faces so exceeding bright
And full of witching grace that with delight
All eyes upon them dwell—faces that make Men mad with love, faces for whose fair sake
Hundreds would gladly die—yet those who own
This wealth of loveliness have hearts of stone,
Their beauty being like the light that lies
In polar seas and shines in polar skies—
Light that the never sinking sun bestows
With many jewel gleams and rainbow glows,
But with no warmth. And so the splendor there

ROUTED BY EL MAHDI.

HICKS PASHA'S ARMY WIPED OUT.

Slaughtered by the False Prophet's Forces After Three Days' Resistance.

The army of Hicks Pasha has been annihilated by the forces of El Mahdi, the false prophet. Nearly ten thousand Egyptian soldiers were slaughtered, and the correspondents of several European newspapers are among the dead. The fighting, lasted three days and nights. The forces of El Mahdi comprised about 300,000 men, including dervishes, Bedouins, mulattoes, and regulars, while the forces of Hicks Pasha numbered 25,000 men according to one account and 10,500 by another. It is known that Hicks Pasha had with him when he left Khartoum the European officers, 7,000 regular infantry, 400 cavalry, of which 100 were cuirassiers and the remainder Bashi Bazouks, one battery of Krupp guns, two batteries of mountain guns, and one battery of Nordenfelts. At Berair and Duem he was reinforced by 1,600 regular infantry and 1,000 additional Bashi Bazouks, making his total command about 11,000 men. After leaving the Nile, en route to El Obeid, the headquarters of the false prophet, he was to have established some eight posts to keep up a line of communication. This would require some one thousand, leaving him barely ten thousand soldiers to meet the enormous hordes of El Mahdi, who are fully equipped with Remington rifles and rockets.

According to the first accounts as brought to Khartoum by a Coptic official, the forces of El Mahdi and Hicks Pasha came together near El Obeid. El Mahdi first sent forward his dervishes, declaring that they would vanquish the enemy by divine aid. These fanatics were armed with swords and spears, and, despite the immense carnage, they threw themselves recklessly upon the Egyptians. The forces of Hicks Pasha were divided into two bodies, but by almost superhuman exertions the sections fought their way over masses of dead bodies and were reunited about noon of the first day. The Egyptians then formed a square and resisted the infidels for two days. Finally, on the third day, the false prophet's troops broke the square, and began massacreing the Egyptians by wholesale, into a sort of trance or stupor. When he recovered he exclaimed: "I come from paradise, where I have been with Allah and his prophet, How I would like to tell you all I saw and heard, but you would not be able to understand it." By these and similar means he gathered around himself thousands of infatuated and zealous followers, to whom he finally announced that Allah had chosen him to be his prophet. He proclaimed that he was the spiritual and temporal ruler of the whole Soudan. El Mahdi's followers organized a court, formed an army, and became so formidable that Egypt, a large part of whose territory was claimed by the prophet, began to interfere. Reuf Pasha, governor of the Soudan, sent several hundred regular troops to arrest him, but they were put to flight and slaughtered. Inflamed by success, the pretender set out upon a career of conquest, and began the war now in progress. He met with varying fortunes, sometimes being victorious over the Egyptians and at other times suffering enormous losses. At Khartoum and El Obeid last year he left 10,000 of his followers in the trenches. Up to that time his total losses were estimated at about 70,000. Undaunted by reverses he gathered new forces from all parts of Mohammedan Africa and continued the war with undiminished zeal.

THE SCENE OF THE GREAT BATTLE.

The district of Kordofan, near the chief town of which the false prophet of the Soudan won the great battle, has been the scene of constant fighting ever since that remarkable imposter rose to eminence. In June of last year he there met and defeated a force of 3,500 Egyptian troops sent against him by Giegler Pasha, the governor-general of the Soudan, his troops consisting of some seven thousand negroes and Arabs, mostly armed with spears. Their onset was so fierce, notwithstanding the superiority of the Egyptians' weapons, that the latter fled immediately on being attacked. After this exploit he marched upon Sennaar, a province of Nubia, which he occupied, thus becoming undisputed master of the vast and populous territory of the Soudan, only a portion of which had been subjugated by Egypt, and all of which he placed in the rear of his victorious army by his forward movement. After the successful termination of the British operations in Egypt an expedition was sent against the prophet, which, after recovering the towns on the eastern side of the White Nile, crossed the river into Kordofan and encountered him at the place El Obeid, near which the recent battle was fought. Here the expedition was for some time besieged after an engagement in which it defeated the imposter, who suffered the loss of 15,000 men. After a time he withdrew to Birkeh, where he rested to reorganize his shattered forces and to await the arrival of reinforcements which he summoned from Bahr-el-Ghazel and Dar-

The Egyptians then formed a square and resisted the infidels for two days. Finally, on the third day, the false prophet's troops broke the square, and began massacreing the Egyptians by wholesale, sparing none.

Capt. Huestor, who was with Hicks Pasha's forces and escaped in the disguise of a Dervish, says that on the way from the battlefield he counted 150 wounded survivors of the engagement. Among these was an European artist named Power. Hicks Pasha had divided his army, sending half to El Obied to demand the surrender of that place, and with the remainder he awaited the arrival of El Mahdi, who was advancing from the southeast. Mahdi, however, met the half of Hicks Pasha's army advancing to El Obied and attacked it. Hearing the firing, Hicks Pasha came up with his whole force and formed a hollow square. Mahdi brought up his fresh regulars, who, it is supposed, were soldiers captured when El Obied fell, and who agreed to take service under him. These numbered 3,000.

Another report of the fight says that Mahdi sent his dervishes to treat with Hicks Pasha's native officers, saying to the Egyptians: "We like you. You are mussulmans. Why fight? Surrender." The dervishes were received by a volley, and then the battle commenced.

The following officers were with the expedition: Col. Farquhar, chief of staff; Majs. Warner, Seckindorf, and Massey; Capts. Heath and Walker; Surgeon Maj. Rosenberg; Lieut.-Cols. Colborne and Coitlogan, and Maj. Martin, the commander of the cavalry, Surgeon-General Georges Bay, Capt. Anatyaga, Morris Brady, late sergeant-major of the royal horse artillery, Maj. Evans, and certain pashes and beys.

The most trustworthy sheiks in the service of the government who arrived at Daven report 11,000 men, including Hicks Pasha, the governor-general, and his entire staff annihilated in a defile at the governor-general of the Soudan, his troops consisting of some seven thousand negroes and Arabs, mostly armed with spears. Their onset was so fierce, notwithstanding the superiority of the Egyptians' weapons, that the latter fled immediately on being attacked. After this exploit he marched upon Sennaar, a province of Nubia, which he occupied, thus becoming undisputed master of the vast and populous territory of the Soudan, only a portion of which had been subjugated by Egypt, and all of which he placed in the rear of his victorious army by his forward movement. After the successful termination of the British operations in Egypt an expedition was sent against the prophet, which, after recovering the towns on the eastern side of the White Nile, crossed the river into Kordofan and encountered him at the place El Obeid, near which the recent battle was fought. Here the expedition was for some time besieged after an engagement in which it defeated the imposter, who suffered the loss of 15,000 men. After a time he withdrew to Birkeh, where he rested to reorganize his shattered forces and to await the arrival of reinforcements which he summoned from Bahr-el-Ghazel and Darfoor. Strengthened by their arrival, and emboldened by the vacillating attitude of the Egyptians, he resumed operations this year. These have, if the dispatches are to be credited, been conducted hitherto with varying success, and for the present at least have been brought to an end by the crushing defeat just inflicted on the forces under Hicks Pasha.

The various districts of Egypt over which El Mahdi, or "the precursor," as the false prophet—whose real name is Mohammed Ahmed—is called, now exercises sway comprise Sennaar, Kordofan, Darfoor, Donga, and Bahr-el-Ghazel, the latter being strictly but a division of Donga. These contain several hundred thousand square miles, but their limits are poorely defined, not only as regards their outer frontiers, but with respect to each other. Speaking roughly, they may be said to extend from latitude 15 to 2 north, with their greatest breadth between longitude 22 and 35 west. Their population has never been estimated with anything like accuracy. Kordofan, which extends farther north than the others, is supposed to be inhabited by 164,740 dwellers in towns, villages, and cultivators of the soil, and about 114,000 nomads. Sennaar supports a population of about 1,500,000, and Darfoor one numbering some 4,000,000. Of Donga not enough is known to enable an estimate to be made. Probably it is at least as populous as Darfoor. This would make El Mahdi ruler over something like nine and a quarter millions of people.

The characteristics of this vast region vary greatly, according to locality. Kordofan, the battle-ground of the revolt, is, for the most part, a rolling steppe, elevations of more than fifty feet being such remarkable features in the landscape as to

The most trustworthy sheiks in the service of the government who arrived at Daven report 11,000 men, including Hicks Pasha, the governor-general, and his entire staff annihilated in a defile at Kashgate, whither they were led by a treacherous guide. The guide led them to a rocky, wooded defile which was without water, and where an ambuscade had been prepared by the rebels who were armed with rifles and artillery. Hicks Pasha was unable to use his guns. For three days the army, worn by thirst, defended itself, but on the fourth day it was annihilated to a man. Vizetelly, Artere, and fifty soldiers who were outside came in and were taken prisoners. They were carried to El Obied. The rebels captured thirty-six Krupp, Nordenfeldt, and mountain guns, and all the flags and munition of war and camels.

The catastrophe seems to have wholly paralyzed the Egyptian government. Unless very speedy action is taken, it is feared Suakim will fall into the hands of the tribes in revolt acting in concert with Mahdi. The latter is thought to be near Khartoum. If that place should be captured there would be no good defensible position between Mahdi and Cairo except Minich, which is only six hours distant from Cairo. No one believes Mahdi will rest content with the conquest of Soudan. It is feared Turkey will interfere and insist on reconquering the lost province. Neither English nor French wish this. The prospect thus bristles with serious complications.

THE FALSE PROPHET.

El Mahdi, the false prophet, was born at Dongola, and was of humble origin. His real name is Mohammed Ahmed. In his youth he learned to read and write, and after he had emigrated to Sennaar he abandoned his trade as carpenter and became a public reader of the koran. He was eloquent, imaginative, strong-willed, and apt at dissimulation. Pretending to be in direct communication with Allah, he frequently, in the midst of his speeches, stopped suddenly and appeared to fall their outer frontiers, but with respect to each other. Speaking roughly, they may be said to extend from latitude 15 to 2 north, with their greatest breadth between longitude 22 and 35 west. Their population has never been estimated with anything like accuracy. Kordofan, which extends farther north than the others, is supposed to be inhabited by 164,740 dwellers in towns, villages, and cultivators of the soil, and about 114,000 nomads. Sennaar supports a population of about 1,500,000, and Darfoor one numbering some 4,000,000. Of Donga not enough is known to enable an estimate to be made. Probably it is at least as populous as Darfoor. This would make El Mahdi ruler over something like nine and a quarter millions of people.

The characteristics of this vast region vary greatly, according to locality. Kordofan, the battle-ground of the revolt, is, for the most part, a rolling steppe, elevations of more than fifty feet being such remarkable features in the landscape as to serve as marks for a whole day's journey. The average elevation of the district above the sea is about 1,600 feet. There are few streams, and in the dry season water is an article of commerce. The nomadic population is remarkable for its fine physique and capacity of endurance. Sennaar is separated from Kordofan by the White Nile and is traversed farther to the east by that river's chief affluent, the Blue Nile, the two joining at Khartoum and forming the Nile proper. In its northern part this district is almost rainless, two and even three years sometimes passing without the occurrence of a single shower. In the south, however, there is a regular rainy season that lasts from May until September. The climate is intensely warm, the thermometer frequently marking a temperature of 120 d grees in the shade. The soil is fertile along the White Nile; animals, such as the elephant, giraffe, zebra, rhinoceros, lion, camel, hippopotamus, hyena, leopard, antelope, and others familiar to students of books of African travel, are found in the country. The inhabitants are composed of a mixture of races, about half of them belonging to a servile class and all being described as dissolute, idle, and drunken. The prevailing religion is Mohammedan. The people of Donga partake of many of the characteristics of those just described, so far as they are known. Many of them are warlike, and until recently were active participants in the raids made into the purely negro countries to capture slaves. Darfoor is a mountaineous country, some peaks of the Marra chain rising to the height of 4,000 feet. The climate is generally healthy, the rainy season lasting from June to September. The land in the vicinity of the mountain streams, or wadis, most of which lose themselves in the sands of Kordofan, is fairly fertile; whereelse it partakes closely of the char-

Wheat, a rare crop in central Africa, is raised in the highlands somewhat extensively, while in the south tropical products grow luxuriantly. Tobacco is also cultivated. Copper, lead, and iron are mined; cattle, sheep, camels are bred largely. The population of the extensive district, from which the false prophet has largely recruited his forces, is warlike and treacherous.

Besides the districts referred to there would seem to be every reason to believe that numbers of the Mahdi's followers come from the independent regions of the Soudan, which are inhabited by mixed Arab and negro races, Mohammedan in creed and much giving to warfare. These districts have reached a higher development than those that had been brought under Egyptian rule, large towns being common and a certain sort of barbaric order having superseded the tribal system to a considerable extent. Mention is sometimes made of bodies of cavalry that form parts of the prophet's forces, a circumstance that lends additional probability to the assumption that his sway is very much more extended than might at first be supposed, for the people of the Egyptian Soudan are not as a rule possessors of many horses, while those in the independent territories are expert cavalrymen.

Dick kept the fashionable saloon in town. It was tip-top. Every glass was polished to perfection. The liquors just sparkled in the decanters. The counter was all over carving and gilding, and the bar-tender was the daintiest young man in Fiddleburg.

Dick himself was proud of "that 'ere establishment," as he called it. He would look into the mirrors with perfect pride, as he beheld his own picture in their polished faces.

Fiddleburg had a new painter. He was an artist. A picture by Nicols was a real gem. Most of the stores had one, in some shape or another. The livery stable man had a horse painted that people came miles to see. The butcher had a cow that you could almost hear calling her calf, so life-like did it appear. The restaurant man had a pie and some cakes and doughnuts so exquisitely done, that when he put them in his window the boys felt just like grabbing at them. The milliner had a wooden dummy in her window, with a face and neck so tinted and fixed that men all stopped to gaze at that lovely thing.

Dick Johnson thought he would have a grand sign for his saloon. Cost, to him, was nothing so that it might be grand and suggestive.

Dick Johnson thought he would have a grand sign for his saloon. Cost, to him, was nothing so that it might be grand and suggestive.

"Hello, old fellow," said Dick, as he entered the paint shop, and saw a splendid figure for a cigar stand just finished, "I've got a job for you. It must be something hifalutin, and the bill ain't limited."

That was just what our man of colors wanted. He was ambitious, and very glad to get the chance to paint something really fine, if he could only get well paid for it.

"I want a sign," said Dick, "something to show what I do—to suggest the business, you know; just anything good you can think of. You are a painter, and can tell better than I what will do."

"I'll do my very best," said Nicols, and Dick was off without another word.

The painter went to work, and all his skill and ingenuity was brought to the task. He got a long wide side board, and filled it with human figures, almost life size, and so life-like in appearance that you could almost see them stir. Beginning at one end was a good-looking young man, coming to take a drink. The next figure was the same man, somewhat intoxicated; and in the next he was down in the gutter; then in jail; then in a fight, and lastly a poor broken down man in poverty. Alongside, in the different stages of life were his mother and sisters weeping at his condition, and a sad wife and children at her side. Then the boy was seen in the Industrial School, and his girl in the Magdalen. It was most beautifully painted, and underneath was lettered, in fine characters, "We make these things here."

When Dick was told it was done, he settled the bill, ordered it put up at once, lighted his cigar and went on with his exciting game of cards, not taking time even to look at his new embellishment. It was covered with paper till dark, so as to surprise the residents of Fiddleburg at daylight. And it did, too. Next morning, as Dick's usual customers came for their usual morning bitters, they saw that picture, and—stepped back, having changed their minds about what they would do. In a letter just received Mrs. Craik protests against being called by American journals Dinah Mulock Craik, which she says is not her name. In private life she is Mrs. Dinah Maria Craik, or Mrs. George Lillie Craik, while in public she prefers to be known only as "the author of John Halifax, Gentleman." It is not the custom in England for married ladies to retain their maiden name.

During the fifty-years that have elapsed since the death of the composer Schubert so many alterations have been made in his songs that the original text of the music is often widely different from the present one. An attempt is being made to restore the text to its primitive condition by comparing it with the autograph copies made by Schubert himself, and preserved in public and private collections, chiefly in Vienna.

In responding to an address of welcome while at Liverpool, on his return from Canada, the Marquis of Lorne said that if he had been able to advance the prosperity of that country, it was very much owing to the labors of the Princess Louise, who had "undertaken voyages and journeys which must have been trying to any one, even in the strongest health, with the view of helping to make the people of Europe know the advantages and resources of Canada." This explains very handsomely why the Princess was so often and so protractedly absent from the Dominion.

In Russia the Nihilists are now broken up into widely scattered groups, each more or less independent of the rest. They are desperately in need of funds. Last spring a rich Russian widow married a young Pole, and soon afterward was murdered and robbed. Six months afterward, on being arrested as a Nihilist, he confessed he had murdered the widow for the sake of her money, which he had distributed among the young Nihilists of Poland. Similar cases have frequently occurred.

Dick went out to see the sign, too, and he saw "the point" at once, and had that sign taken down "on the double quick," but many of his old customers never got over that morning's impression, and Dick has yet a sign to dispose of to any saloon keeper who wants one of that particular kind.

Just at the moment, the importers' windows are filled with striped dress goods of every description, the most expensive and attractive being the rage fabrics of satin and velvet alternating, the satin stripe very frequently being richly embossed with clusters of small brilliant flowers.

Rich brocades with patterns of many-tinted flowers in wreaths and sprays that copy nature literally in size and color are on grounds of colored satin. Birds and butterflies, shrimps and many less agreeable objects, as well as many fruit designs, are employed for such rich materials as embossed velvets and elegant brocaded satins.

An aged colored couple in Terre Haute Ind., who have had twenty-five children, four of whom were killed in the war, decline a pension, saying that the Government had done enough for them in emancipating their race.

Canada, the Marquis of Lorne said that if he had been able to advance the prosperity of that country, it was very much owing to the labors of the Princess Louise, who had "undertaken voyages and journeys which must have been trying to any one, even in the strongest health, with the view of helping to make the people of Europe know the advantages and resources of Canada." This explains very handsomely why the Princess was so often and so protractedly absent from the Dominion.

In Russia the Nihilists are now broken up into widely scattered groups, each more or less independent of the rest. They are desperately in need of funds. Last spring a rich Russian widow married a young Pole, and soon afterward was murdered and robbed. Six months afterward, on being arrested as a Nihilist, he confessed he had murdered the widow for the sake of her money, which he had distributed among the young Nihilists of Poland. Similar cases have frequently occurred.

Queen Elizabeth of Roumania was seen recently, on a state occasion, in an elegant national costume. "The skirt and corsage, full and flowing, were cream-colored, with gold embroidery ; a gauze veil of a rosy tint enveloped her head and neck, and like a morning cloud floated round her sweet and smiling countenance, on which at moments appeared a passing shade of repressed sadness. Her deep blue eyes, with this background, have an intense light, her delicately cut lips have a frank smile of welcome, and her figure, slightly leaning forward, reminds one of Sara Bernhardt in the sweet and poetical vision of Roland's daughter." The Queen writes books, and has a talent for painting and illuminating.

The Chicago Lever, writing in regard to the Woman Suffrage question, which is now becoming an important political question every where, says :—"We cannot agree with those who believe that the ballot in the hands of women would be a complete cure for all the dangers which threaten us. We believe that women are better than men on the average. There are less women than men in our jails. There are more women than men in our churches. Drunkenness and profanity are less common among women than men. All this does not prove that there are no bad women in the world, but it does prove that the average woman stands on a higher moral plane than the average man."

THE POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE OF GERMAN WAR.

As seen by an American Monarch.

Oh, the pomp, pride and circumstance of glorious war! We came here to witness the "manovers" of the Eleventh Army Corps of Germany. This consisted of, first, a grand parade before the Kaiser and his suite, composed of kings, princes and dignitaries from mostof the countries of Europe and the East, and, second, of movements simulating a grand combat between hostile armies.

The Eleventh Army Corps marshalled over 30,000 men—infantry, cavalry, artillery, lancers and pontooners—with their accompanying trains of waggons and ambulances.

My acquaintance with military affairs being somewhat limited, I preferred the station of an humble spectator rather than the place to which my rank as an American sovereign entitled me, among the 200 or 300 personages that constituted the suite of the Emperor. In consequence, the display was further removed than I could have wished a mistake for which I shall take Gen. Von Moltke to task on the very first opportunity. I shall not now attempt to describe in detail the costumes and equipments either of the corps or of the Kaiser and his suite. I can only say of the latter that they were as gorgeous in color as a parterre of brilliant flowers, and must have dazzled the eyes of the soldiers as he moved in solid phalanx from one end of the line to the other, at least a mile in length. The troops were almost equally brilliant in their costumes of blue, red, yellow and white, and their gilded hemlets shone like a golden pavement. Afterwards the troops all passed along in front of the Emperor, the cavalry and cannon at full trot. The precision of movement would have satisfied the most captious critic, and with reason, for the corps is composed mainly of whose drill and bearing were as perfect as German military skill could make them. It was a sight worth seeing, and when one remembered that there were fifteen corps in the standing army, or 450,000 men, and that in a month's notice the Empire can bring into the field, fully equipped and munitioned for service, 1,500,000, the best disciplined and fitted for duty of any army in the world, he cannot but realise the immense strength and energy of the German people.

The second day's performance consisted of the manœuvres of the army in battle with a supposed enemy. The field covered by these movements was not less than three to five miles in length and breadth. My party was posted on an eminence as little removed from danger as the general commanding on our side—that of the enemy—was willing to allow. So, though the day was lowering, with rain and mist a King. But if on the field he looks still young, at home, and as I scanned him yesterday at the Schloss Church, sitting opposite and very near, I could see that even though I had not. The Kaiserin, who sat on his right, and who was carried in a chair (for she does not walk), was worse than old, for she enamels terribly, and looks like a ghost—if we know how such a thing looks. I did not tell her so, because I feared the advice would not be received with a good grace, the Empress having a temper of her own, as well as a false face. The Crown Princess Victoria, who sat next her, is fat and forty, but not fair, in fact a second edition of her mother, the Queen, only if possible more so. Yet she has made herself deservedly beloved and popular by kindly and generous acts. A son and a daughter were also present—the latter apparently about 16 or 18 years old, and an image of her grandmother, as she appeared to me when a young girl—a pleasant oval face, but not handsome. Years, and the fat which comes with them, do not improve this race. The Crown Prince has a fine manly figure and a full brown beard, very slightly touched with gray. As he and the Prince of Wales sat conversing together, in a box at the theatre last week, it struck me as a little comical that both these princes should have grown old waiting to slip into shoes that decline to empty. It is to be hoped their heads do not ache for the crowns that will cause them to ache quite soon enough.

The young King of Spain was in the same box, and made quite a contrast—a slender, genteel young fellow of about 30, with jet black hair, mustache and whiskers, well trimmed. I was sorry not to have the opportunity to make his better acquaintance, for the face had

A PLEASING, OPEN AND CANDID EXPRESSION.

He frequently nodded and smiled to the ladies in the imperial box opposite, and took occasion to visit it several times and chat with the young princess, Victoria's granddaughter, with whom his efforts did not seem to be eminently successful. The King of Servia also made his appearance in the box, but as he had not the honor of my acquaintance, for I have barely seen him, I can only say that he seems to be about 40, with a full, round face, not over intellectual. The King of Saxony, who was also present, is a man of 60 or more, gray, but erect and tall. I fear he has a hard time of it, since he has played second fiddle to the Emperor, and the glory of the lesser kingdom of Germany has been absorbed by the greater. It is not my purpose to step out of the sphere of the crowned heads to notice the throng of lesser luminaries. Let them look for consideration to their own press.

My party was posted on an eminence as little removed from danger as the general commanding on our side—that of the enemy—was willing to allow. So, though the day was lowering, with rain and mist that somewhat obscured the view, we had upon the whole a good outlook. First we saw, with our glasses, bodies of troops massing upon the distant slopes, and artillery taking position along the crest of the hills. When the battle began we could see the flash and smoke of the cannon, and hear the succeeding boom as the batteries opened on either side. After a while began the taking of new positions and the gradual approach toward us of the bocse Germans, compelling the retreat of our party in the fight from one position to another until finally our right wing was flanked and the village in the valley at our feet, where our troops had concentrated, was taken. Flying detachments then mounted the hill and took their last positions all around us. Until now we had heard at a distance only the boom of cannon and the rattle of musketry, blending at last into a continued roar, as the contest reached the village below us. Now cannon belched forth its fire and smoke in our very front and close in our rear, and the crash of firearms resounded on all sides, Suddenly the strife ended—we were conquered. We had hardly expected so terrific a combat to terminate without great slaughter, and though ambulances were drawn up for use very near to us, candor compels me to say that nor did we even hear the whistle of a bullet. In fact, the event too much resembled the fierce combat that took place between the burghers of Manhattan and the Swedes, as described by Irving, in that the historian, while dealing with death blows fast and thick, had to be careful not to allow any of the combatants to be killed, lest he should falsify history.

But this mock battle, though deficient in the horrors of actual war, was well calculated to give us a good idea of the operations of armies on the battlefield.

Oh, the pomp, pride and splendors of royalty! Among the crowd drawn hither by the fame of the manœuvres, besides the Kaiser and Kaiserin, are no less than three other Kings—those of Spain, Saxony and Servia; two Crown Princes, Germany and England, Prince Frederick

It is not my purpose to step out of the sphere of the crowned heads to notice the throng of lesser luminaries. Let them look for consideration to their own press.

I must nevertheless make an exception in the case of Count von Moltke—a true gentleman of the old school, as well as the famous captain who piloted the German armies so successfully through the French war. On horseback he is young as ever, but sitting at rest he appears quite aged, as he really is to my certain knowledge. But I do not let it be known here, for the ladies at least would not believe me, to judge by the crowds of young girls that continue to get near him whenever they have a chance, and whom he is so fond of, as gay old fellows, like the Count and myself, are apt to be, you know.

Women on our School Boards.

The Globe has been the first to suggest the election or appointment of two or three women as members of the Toronto School Board next year. Why not? In England women have been acting in that capacity for a time, and who says that the Canadian women are not just as capable as their sisters the other side of the Atlantic? The men who still think that women have not the necessary brains, or intelligence, or good judgment, for any other position than mere house ornaments, or household conveniences, are simply old fogies. The days they dream about are past, and the women of to-day are much different from their ideal creatures and fancies.

Probably, as a whole, the mothers of Canada to-day pay more attention to the physical, moral, and intellectual development of the children than do the fathers, and they are in a better position to judge of just what is required in our common schools for the well being of the rising generation. They are, too, in a much better position to judge of the progress the children make under certain teachers, or certain systems of teaching. We believe, too, that the women would pay a good deal more careful attention to School Board matters than the average male Trustee now does, and there would be fewer failures of meetings for "want of a quorum" than we now read about, if the School Boards were only differently made up. By all means then, gentleman, stand aside, for the women are coming to the front, and you can't stop the advance, if you want to.

Among the crowd drawn hither by the fame of the manœuvres, besides the Kaiser and Kaiserin, are no less than three other Kings—those of Spain, Saxony and Servia; two Crown Princes, Germany and England, Prince Frederick Cyarles, and some thirty other Princes and Princesses of Germany, some of whom are no longer sovereigns; English and German Dukes and Lords, and envoys from many foreign countries, including Turkey, China and Japan. Of course two such American sovereigns as the King of Springwells and his brother-in-law, Bela, King of Edom are not to be excluded. Consequently, we are surrounded by royalty. Emperors exhibit before us all their honors; we meet Kings and Princes in our daily walks and drives; such lower orders, as dukes and nobles, of course we hardly deign to notice—they are too common, altogether, as well as too numerous—only what was born to the purple satisfies our fastidious eyes and fills our souls with royal satisfaction. And here we all are—we and they—gathered into one little burg, and pensioned out among the innumerable boarding houses.

Since I was last in Homburg the Kaiser has aged considerably, and is looking thinner than his portraits represent him, but his activity has not apparently diminished; he bears wonderfully the fatigue of the daily services of troops, dinners at the Kursaal and evening theatre. He sits his horse for hours at a time, and, intimate as we are with him, we cannot see but that he bears up under his weight of 85 years as well as he did under his three score and ten, when we knew him only as

A Self-Propelling Buggy.

Mr. A. E. Seay, of our town, says the Port Gibson (Miss.) Reveille, tells us he has placed his plans for a self-propelling buggy in the hands of a good model-maker in Philadelphia for a working model of his invention. He says it differs from other steam or self-propelling vehicles going the rounds of the papers. The machine can be made about the usual size of an ordinary buggy with four wheels, with power equivalent to two horses. The machinery, engines, generator, and occupant of the vehicle, are supported by the rear or driving-wheels, which give it the necessary traction to insure success. The front wheels act as a balancing and controlling medium. He uses liquid fuel, and can generate the maximum power in less time than a horse can be harnessed and attached to a buggy. The machine can be operated and controlled as easily as a lady can a sewing machine, and can be made to run twenty or more miles per hour, on good roads, and will ascend a hill having a rise of seventeen feet to the undred with perfect ease.

A tailor informed one of his creditors that if he did not settle his bill immedi ately he woudl commence suit, but was surprised to receive a postal-card by return mail politely iuforming him to look to the settlement of one suit before commencing another.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, DEC. 21, 1883.

—MERRY CHRISTMAS.

—Mr. D. W. Allison was gazetted on Saturday last as M. P. for Lennox.

—Friday last was a very cold day—especially for the Tories of West Middlesex and West Simcoe.

—Mowat is going—ahead. His majority in the House is now 14. It will be 20 after the other contested elections are over.

—The Lennox Provincial election case was before the Court of Appeal yesterday. Decision will not be reached before the end of the week.

—There is a tide in the affairs of political parties as well as men. The tide is at the flow with Reformers and they are taking advantage of it. It will lead them to the Government benches at Ottawa inside of four years.

—The elections on Friday last resulted in a glorious victory. Hon. Geo. W. Ross, the new Minister of Education, was elected for West Middlesex by the handsoms majority of 156, notwithstanding the great efforts of the bribery brigade to defeat him; Mr. D. M. Cameron the Reform candidate carried the same constituency for the Commons and Mr. Phelps retained his seat in West Simcoe by an increased majority. The Op-ever light the Standard's course cannot be defended. It, in the first place, advocated the cause of a man whom it knew to be blasphemer; secondly, it suppressed from its readers the proof of the blasphemy which was given in public court, and lastly, it is now vainly trying to make it appear that the great wrong was done—not by Roe, the author of the blasphemy—but by THE EXPRESS, in giving it publicity. Can the organ believe for a minute that it will be able to convince even the most narrow-minded Conservative that its course is right? Verily, the organ's wits are rapidly running out.

—There is a Cabinet crisis at Quebec. Premier Mousseau will resign and a new Cabinet will be formed by Dr. Ross, of Three Rivers, in which the Castor element will predominate. Mr. Mousseau will retire to a judgeship.

—The Mail admits since the West Middlesex elections that Mr. Mowat's "private character is irreproachable." The proper definition of a man of irreproachable private character is, according to the Mail, "Bull Pup" and "Slugger." The Mail, our readers will remember, "is a gentleman's paper—written by gentleman for gentleman."

—The frantic efforts A. H. Roe is making to quash the proceedings brought against him by Mr. E. B. Miles for bribery, are strong evidences of his guilt. Were he able to clear himself of the charges, as he alleged he was at the Conservative Convention, he would be glad of the opportunity of having the court pronounce upon his actions. But he knows that his denial of guilt will not stand. He is afraid that the trial would disclose the truth and he would be brought into still greater contempt with the people—if such were possible—and hence his efforts to quash proceedings. We understand he has appealed against the decision of Mr. Dalton as a last resort.

—The Toronto News every Saturday contains a letter to a prominent politician. Two weeks ago Sir Charles Tupper was the subject and he was handled without gloves. Last Saturday Sir Richard Cartwright was the person addressed. The two afforded a striking contrast. The worst the writer could charge Sir Richard with was aristocratic leanings. He admits that Sir Richard is scrupulously honest and can be trusted with public funds; that he was never at any time a servile follower of the Conservatives; that he is probably the best read public man in Canada, and that he is all in all a most estimable gentleman. Harder things than these could be said of a public man.

—The Tories express a determination to displace Mr. John Webster from the town assessorship next year. They have Tory assessors in nearly all the other municipalities and they think they would run their elec-

—There is a tide in the affairs of political parties as well as men. The tide is at the flow with Reformers and they are taking advantage of it It will lead them to the Government benches at Ottawa inside of four years.

—The elections on Friday last resulted in a glorious victory. Hon. Geo. W. Ross, the new Minister of Education, was elected for West Middlesex by the handsoms majority of 156, notwithstanding the great efforts of the bribery brigade to defeat him; Mr. D. M. Cameron the Reform candidate carried the same constituency for the Commons and Mr. Phelps retained his seat in West Simcoe by an increased majority. The Opposition retained Cardwell, but by a small majority. The net gain to the Mowat Government on a division is 2 votes. The result has given a quietus to the cry "Mowat must go." The Government is as strong as any Government need be and instead of its following decreasing with time, there is every indication that the bye elections will bring increased support. The Liberals of the ridings are to be congratulated. Lennox set them a good example and they not only followed t, but went considerable better.

—The Mowat Government has had a succession of victories this week. Immediately following the news of the triumphant election of Hon. Mr. Ross and Mr. Phelps, came a cablegram announcing a victory for the Government before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England, in the matter of Hodge vs. the Queen, involving the constitutionality of the Crooks Act and the right of the Provinces to regulate the liquor traffic. The case was that of a Mr. Hodge, of Toronto, who sold liquor to a minor, and kept his billiard room open after hours. He was fined and the case appealed from one court to another, with the result of obtaining a decision by the Privy Council on the following points:—

1. That the Local Legislature has full legislative authority to enact laws and regulations regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors.

2. That the same Legislature has power to delegate that authority to Boards of License Commissioners.

3. That such Boards of Commissioners have the power to authorize the punishment by fine or imprisonment of any one found guilty of violating such laws and regulations truth and he would be brought into greater contempt with the people—if such were possible—and hence his efforts to quash proceedings. We understand he has appealed against the decision of Mr. Dalton as a last resort.

—The Toronto News every Saturday contains a letter to a prominent politician. Two weeks ago Sir Charles Tupper was the subject and he was handled without gloves. Last Saturday Sir Richard Cartwright was the person addressed. The two afforded a striking contrast. The worst the writer could charge Sir Richard with was aristocratic leanings. He admits that Sir Richard is scrupulously honest and can be trusted with public funds; that he was never at any time a servile follower of the Conservatives; that he is probably the best read public man in Canada, and that he is all in all a most estimable gentleman. Harder things than these could be said of a public man.

—The Tories express a determination to displace Mr. John Webster from the town assessorship next year. They have Tory assessors in nearly all the other municipalities and they think they would run their elections better with a Tory in his place. It is well that Reformers should know this. Conservatives always cry no politics at municipal elections, but it is singular that they always consider the candidate who is a Tory the best fitted for the office, and they vote for him every time. They are now running the elections throughout the county on straight party lines and hope to accomplish their ends by inducing Reformers to vote for their tools. Reformers should not be hoodwinked in that way. And it is not likely they will.

—The complaint against Mr. Webster that he acted the partisan has no foundation whatever. His has always been a fair and just assessment. It is true that two voters were omitted from the roll this year, but that was merely a mistake. One was omitted by an oversight on the part of the assessor and the other in the same way by the clerk. Neither was intentional. Mistakes of this kind will occur with the best of men. Mr. Webster is a most efficient assessor and should stay. No doubt he will.

—If the Tory organ wants an evidence of partisan assessorship letit look to Richmond. No less than forty Reform votes were omitted from the roll of last year. The work was done in the same manner in Ernesttown. In some of the townships the mistakes were no doubt unintentional, but not so in Richmond. The assessor for that township evidently laid himself out to make all the Tory votes possible and to put on just as few Reformers as he could help. The Tory organ has no grounds for complaint on the score of assessment. With honest voters' lists Mr. Allison's majority would not have been less than 200.

—We are pleased to notice that the de-

The result of this decision is an endorsation of the contention of the Ontario Government, and the Reform leaders in the Commons, that the licensing power is vested in the Local Legislature.

—The Standard is still harping away about THE EXPRESS having published blasphemy. In its last issue it says:—

"The Napanee Express does not attempt to and cannot justify its recent publication of blasphemous and indecent literature. What choice (?) reading it was for the people to put into the hands of their children as a model of literary excellence and purity!"

We acknowledge that the report of the trial did not furnish the choicest family reading, and nothing but a sense of public duty would have led us to give it space in our columns. But the charge related to a man who the people of the county elected to one of one of the highest positions in their gift and they were entitled to a full and impartial report of the case. This we furnished. It was a public duty, and unpleasant though it was, we performed it. But how does the course of the Standard contrast with that of THE EXPRESS? The Standard knew for years—at least, one of its proprietors knew, for he swore to the fact—that Roe had used the vile blasphemy with which he was charged, yet the pitiable sheet had not a word of condemnation for the man, but on the contrary did all in its power to elevate him to a representative position. And now it has the impudence to chide THE EXPRESS, which exposed the monster, with wrong-doing. The less our contemporary has to say about this matter the better for what little reputation it has left. Look at the question in what —We are pleased to notice that the descendants of the U. E. Loyalists in Adolphustown have taken steps to provide for holding a centenary celebration in June next of the landing of the pilgrim fathers in that old township. By reference to our advertising columns in will be seen that a meeting is called for the Town Hall, Adolphustown, on Monday, June 10. No better place could be selected for such a celebration and it is to be hoped the project will be successfully carried out.

—The Tonquin question has resulted in an outbreak between France and China, and the indications are that there will be considerable fighting. The French seem to calculate on an easy victory and many permanent advantages. But in this they may find themselves mistaken. China has a large army and navy which do not lack bravery. Six thousand French troops with gunboats have landed at the scene of operations. The enemy's force is estimated at 20,000.

MILES vs. ROE.

MOTION TO DISMISS THE ACTION REFUSED.

Action to be Proceeded With.

In Practice Chambers, Toronto, on Friday last, before Mr. Dalton, Mr. Clement, of McCarthy & Co., moved to dismiss the action, Miles vs. Roe, mainly on the ground that there had been "wilful delay" in taking the proceedings. The action was brought under section 119 of the Act of 1874, which provides that every person guilty of bribery shall be liable to pay a penalty of $200 for each offence, or in default of payment the person may be imprisoned. Mr. Miles, a responsible farmer, brings the present action against the notorious A. H. Roe, for seventeen acts of bribery proved to have been committed by him in the Lennox Dominion election. At $200 each case the amount is $3,400, which is the sum sued for.

Mr. Clement having made the motion to dismiss the action,

Mr. Bethune, Q. C., read affidavits as to the cause of delay. He then recounted the steps which had been taken against Roe under another section of the Act, and showed how they had proved abortive in enabling to escape punishment for the most shameless and scandalous cases of bribery which had ever been brought out in this country.

Mr. Dalton—Did you say most?

Mr. Bethune—Yes, the most shameless in our record.

Mr. Dalton—Do you think there can be any "most"—any question or degree—in such an offence? That is why I made the remark.

Mr. Bethune—Well, I can only say that from the evidence given at the trial this man Roe went about bribing every person he came in contact with. He then proceeded to argue that the construction to be put upon the words "wilful delay" used in the statute was, not that the delay was intentional, or an act of the will, as it could not well be anything else, but that it was inexcusable. He went on to say that if the writ had been issued before the trial of the election petition there was every reason to fear that Roe would endeavor to spirit away or as he had done in regard to the election trial. One reason, he supposed, why the statute had made provision with respect to wilful delay was that an unreasonable delay might have the effect of prejudicing the defendant by preventing him from getting evidence to meet the charges, but this did not apply in the present case. He alluded to the dates of the various proceedings, as showing that the delay had been very short, and that it had not been "wilful" in the sense intended by the statute.

Mr. Aylsworth cited the dates more fully, beginning with the election, and showing that the defendant was not helpless or defenceless in the matter of costs, because the Act of last session required that in such a suit as this security had to be given for the costs, and besides, the plaintiff, Mr. Miles, is a substantial farmer. He went on to show that the plaintiff was not responsible for the delays which had taken place in the trial of

Mr. Clement said the affidavit of the defendant showed that he was not aware of the issue of the writ, and besides the election petition was by other parties than those who were in this suit. He then argued as to the meaning of the words "wilful delay," that wilful simply meant that it was deliberately done—the act of the will. He referred to Guest vs. Caldecott, contending that it supported his argument, and that the circumstances had nothing to do with whether the delay was reasonable or not. He claimed that the statutory limitation should not be overlooked.

Mr. Dalton dismissed the motion with costs.

GREAT GLADSTONE.

Life and Character of the Ulysses of the Liberals.

THE GRAND OLD MAN.

The Greatest Political Figure of This Century.

The Leader of Liberalism—His Political and Literary Labors—How He Appears In the House—His Simple Habits and Strong Will—His Mannerisms as an Orator—The Bravest Act of His Wonderful Career.

The greatest Englishman of the Nineteenth century is William Ewart Gladstone. The long list of English statesmen may be read without finding a single name that shines with greater splendor than his.

WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE.

He is a product of the middle class—the rugged upright Scotch middle class. His father, John Gladstone, was born at Leith, and became a merchant at Liverpool, and a member of parliament for nine years, representing different boroughs, but he never offered himself for Liverpool. His warm interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of his town made him a conspicuous and highly honored citizen. In 1824 the citizens of Liverpool presented him with a magnificent service of plate to "mark their high sense of his successful exertions for the promotion of trade and commerce, and in acknowledgment of his most important services rendered to the town of Liverpool."

offered himself for Liverpool. His warm interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of his town made him a conspicuous and highly honored citizen. In 1824 the citizens of Liverpool presented him with a magnificent service of plate to "mark their high sense of his successful exertions for the promotion of trade and commerce, and in acknowledgment of his most important services rendered to the town of Liverpool."

At first he embraced Whig principles, but later in life became what we call a Liberal Conservative. He was in the house at the same time with his now distinguished son, and heard some of his earlier efforts in parliamentary oratory. He was himself an effective speaker. Sir Robert Peel created him a baronet in 1845, and he died in 1854 at the age of 88.

William Ewart Gladstone had a Scotch mother as well as father. She has been described as "a lady of very great accomplishments, of fascinating manners, of commanding presence and high intellect; one to grace any home and endear any heart." She became the mother of six children, only two of whom survive—Sir Thomas Gladstone, Bart., of Fasque, a quiet man of ordinary mental caliber—and the premier of England. In a brief speech in the Glasgow Trade Hall in 1865 Mr. Gladstone said: "If Scotland is not ashamed of her sons, her sons are not ashamed of Scotland. The memory of the parents to whom I owe my being combines with various other considerations to make me glad and thankful to remember that the blood which runs in my veins is exclusively Scottish." Burke traces the lineage of Gladstone's mother back to Henry III, of England, and Robert Bruce, king of Scotland, a matter of no consequence whatever, whether true or imagined. Of very great consequence, however, was the important fact that the enormous wealth of Sir John Gladstone enabled him to make handsome provision for each of his children during his lifetime. This gave the future great statesman what the blood of kings could not—an opportunity to devote his energies to the public service.

Mr. Gladstone began life as a Tory, a fact which his biographers attribute to the teachings of his father, who had been strongly imbued with the principles of Canning. Like Victor Hugo, the great premier has always been honest in what he has said; but he has grown. Year by year he has developed; every year he has become more liberal, until now he stands with "time on his side," opposing the whole Tory force of England. His mind was bent in the direction of public affairs quite early. When only 12 years old quence, however, was the important fact that the enormous wealth of Sir John Gladstone enabled him to make handsome provision for each of his children during his lifetime. This gave the future great statesman what the blood of kings could not—an opportunity to devote his energies to the public service.

Mr. Gladstone began life as a Tory, a fact which his biographers attribute to the teachings of his father, who had been strongly imbued with the principles of Canning. Like Victor Hugo, the great premier has always been honest in what he has said; but he has grown. Year by year he has developed; every year he has become more liberal, until now he stands with "time on his side," opposing the whole Tory force of England. His mind was bent in the direction of public affairs quite early. When only 12 years old his father discussed political matters of the day with him, and taught him to think for himself.

It is said that the Gladstones, as a family, always "had a superabundance of energy, which carried their action beyond the limits of their private concerns." The premier has been favored with this vital energy to an extraordinary degree. Born at Liverpool on Dec. 29, 1809, he is now in his 77th year. Instead of tottering, bent and imbecile, toward the grave, as many do long before they are as old as he, he is standing erect at the head of the English nation, his hand on the throat of the incubus of Toryism, his speech ringing down the halls of the future, freighted with prophecy and glittering with the fires of liberty. At the height of his power at 76, he is a conspicuous refutation of the hoary superstition that three score and ten years is the limit of man's usefulness. There need be no old age when the spirit keeps young. Interest in life, activity of brain and sympathy with humanity will defy old age and keep it forever at bay.

Mr. Gladstone had not passed his 12th birthday when he was entered at Eton, where he spent six years, learning all there was to be learned there then. He turned his surplus energies and spare hours to literature—started a college journal, writing the most of it himself, and launching into a ponderous poem eulogistic of Richard Cœur de Lion, full of "spears," "jav'lins" and "leaguered walls." After leaving Eton he studied two years with Dr. Turner, afterward bishop of Calcutta, then went to Christ church, Oxford. At examination in 1831 he

His Gladstone, was born at Leith, a merchant at Liverpool, and a parliament for nine years, repre-erent boroughs, but he never self for Liverpool. His warm erything pertaining to the wel-wn made him a conspicuous and ed citizen. In 1824 the citizens presented him with a magnifi-of plate to "mark their high sense sful exertions for the promotion commerce, and in acknowledg-nost important services rendered of Liverpool."

e embraced Whig principles, but became what we call a Liberal . He was in the house at the with his now distinguished son, gained the highest honors of the university, graduating double first class. The debates of the Oxford union naturally attracted him, and he attained the proud position of president.

In the year 1832 he took the first step upward in the political ladder. He was in Italy when summoned to be the nominee for the house of commons for the borough of Newark. The reform bill had just been passed, and the kingdom waited anxiously to see what would follow on the summoning of the first reformed parliament. At that time he was 22 years old, somewhat robust and considered handsome. The author of the history of Newark speaks of his bright, thoughtful look and attractive bearing. An oil painting made a few years later, which has been much engraved, represents him with a full face, large dark eyes and eyebrows. Compared with the face he wears to-day, there is still a strong likeness. The same broad intellectual forehead is in both—the same prominent nose, anxious eyes and earnest expression.

After the election he attended a meeting of the Constitutional club at Nottingham and delivered a lengthy address. Speaking of this a Conservative journalist made the first public prediction of future greatness for the young member in these words: "He is a gentleman of amiable manners and the most extraordinary talent, and we venture to predict, without the slightest exaggeration, that he will one day be classed amongst the most able statesmen in the British senate." Frequently predictions whose subjects are phenomenally bright youths come to naught. This one was more than fulfilled.

To realize how much Mr. Gladstone has changed since the beginning of his public career, we have only to remember that his maiden speech in parliament was made in defense of the domestic institution of slavery. Africans were imported into Demerara and Trinidad later than into any other colony, and the elder Gladstone owned many slaves in Demerara. To denounce "the peculiar institution" was to impugn the humanity of his father. The session of 1833, however, was memorable for the extinction of slavery in the British colonies at a cost of £20,000,000, concluding the humanitarian work begun by Wilberforce.

At the age of 25 Mr. Gladstone was junior lord of the treasury, under Sir Robert Peel. This was remarkable headway for so young a man to make, but was only the beginning of more rapid advancement. Parliament had scarcely met for the session of 1835 when he was installed in the office of under secretary for the colonies, and brought in his first bill, which was designed to improve the condition of passengers in merchant vessels. The ministry did not live long enough to adorn the statute books with this humble reformatory effort.

His first staggering blow, however, came from contact with the question of the Irish church, which was destined to exercise an important influence on later stages of his career. The ministry of which he formed a member was defeated and forced to resign on a nucleus of the Irish church bill of 1839.

In 1839 Mr. Gladstone married Miss Catherine Glynn, daughter of Sir Richard Glynn, vain, for, to a speculative mind like his, theology is a far more inviting and extensive field than any offered by the board of trade." Five years later, when freed from the cares of office, this estimate of his character was literally fulfilled when he gleefully did battle with the pope for the vanquishing of the Vatican.

MRS. GLADSTONE.

The revision of the tariff, so closely connected with the free trade policy toward which Gladstone was then drifting, gave him ample opportunity for his genius — that "statesmanlike view of a wide field, combined with that consummate mastery of details which subsequently marked his budgets." Even then he had established a reputation as a debater, and even as an orator and statesman.

Since 1843 Mr. Gladstone has done so much for the people that his minor achievements have been lost sight of. Not every one remembers, however, that he was the author of the parliamentary train which travels the full length of all lines twice a day at a fare of one penny a mile.

In 1845 he resigned because the government brought in a bill dealing with Maynooth college in a way that offended his sound church principles. Next year he returned to the ministry as secretary of state for the colonies, and pledged himself to indorse Sir Robert Peel's free trade policy, which went to the length of abolishing the corn laws. This swept him far in advance of the Duke of Newcastle, his political father, and necessitated the resignation of his seat for Newark. Throughout the remainder of that session, and during the greater part of the next, he was without a seat. When he returned as member for Oxford the corn law repeal act was passed, Sir Robert Peel relegated to the opposition benches, and the Whigs in power.

In 1850 Sir Robert Peel died. In the winter of that year Mr. Gladstone went to Naples for a holiday, and there investigated prison life under Ferdinand II, and became so interested in its barbarities that he succeeded, by means of letters to Lord Aberdeen, then premier, in arousing the indignation

The ministry did not live long enough to adorn the statute books with this humble reformatory effort.

His first staggering blow, however, came from contact with the question of the Irish church, which was destined to exercise an important influence on later stages of his career. The ministry of which he formed a member was defeated and forced to resign on a nucleus of the Irish church bill of 1839.

In 1839 Mr. Gladstone married Miss Catherine Glynn, daughter of Sir Richard Glynn, of Hawarden Castle, Flintshire, now the most familiar postal address in England. They have had eight children, seven of whom are living. The eldest daughter is married to Rev. E. C. Wickham, the head master of Wellington college, one was recently married to a clergyman, the third is unmarried. One of the sons has several times been a member of the house of commons, one is the rector of Hawarden, one is in a merchant's office, and one remains at home. This is, indeed, a singularly modest record of the family of the most illustrious statesman of the century, the minister of a great nation. This man who has made many bishops, and created peers is content and happy in seeing one of his sons rector of the family parish in Flintshire, another at an office desk, and his eldest daughter the wife of a schoolmaster.

Mrs. Gladstone is distinguished by her many social qualities and philanthropic work, as well as by the well known fact that she has been to Mr. Gladstone the most appreciative and devoted of wives—interested in his triumphs and sympathetic in his defeats.

Hawarden Castle is charmingly situated on the estuary of the Dee. In 1651 it was purchased by Sergeant Glynne, the paternal ancestor of Mrs. Gladstone, who was made lord chief justice by Cromwell, and knighted by Charles II. The road through the park is open to the public.

Since 1843 Mr. Gladstone has done so much for the people that his minor achievements have been lost sight of. Not every one remembers, however, that he was the author of the parliamentary train which travels the full length of all lines twice a day at a fare of one penny a mile.

In 1845 he resigned because the government brought in a bill dealing with Maynooth college in a way that offended his sound church principles. Next year he returned to the ministry as secretary of state for the colonies, and pledged himself to indorse Sir Robert Peel's free trade policy, which went to the length of abolishing the corn laws. This swept him far in advance of the Duke of Newcastle, his political father, and necessitated the resignation of his seat for Newark. Throughout the remainder of that session, and during the greater part of the next, he was without a seat. When he returned as member for Oxford the corn law repeal act was passed, Sir Robert Peel relegated to the opposition benches, and the Whigs in power.

In 1850 Sir Robert Peel died. In the winter of that year Mr. Gladstone went to Naples for a holiday, and there investigated prison life under Ferdinand II, and became so interested in its barbarities that he succeeded, by means of letters to Lord Aberdeen, then premier, in arousing the indignation of all Europe against the king. The practical result of this work and wrath did not appear until Garibaldi and a free people marched into Naples, and King Bomba, his priests, women and court ran out.

It has been said that "if Mr. Gladstone had died before 1853 he would have been accounted a brilliant politician cut off before the ripeness of years had brought him fullness of opportunity. He had done great things, but their character was critical rather than constructive. He had spoken brilliantly, but had not achieved anything likely to secure him permanent fame." In 1853, however, he rose to a height that gave him permanent place in history. A year before he had shown his mastery over the science of national finance. Lord Derby was then premier, and Disraeli chancellor of the exchequer. Disraeli and Gladstone had answered each other sharply in debate, but had not become openly hostile. England "had not yet come to look with keen interest for what might follow upon a conflict between these two men, who had no possession in common except genius." Gladstone could never forgive Disraeli's bitter attacks on his old friend, Sir Robert Peel. When Disraeli undertook to deal with finance Gladstone pounced upon him, made an end of him and his budget and the ministry of which he was the prop. Lord Derby resigned.

Lord Aberdeen formed a ministry, placing Mr. Gladstone in the office out of which Gladstone had driven Disraeli, and this cut him loose from the narrow harbor of Toryism and launched him fairly upon the open sea of Liberalism. As we understand Liberalism now, Lord Aberdeen could not be called a Liberal; but he was not a Tory—in truth had succeeded the Tories. Gladstone's conversion to Liberalism was slow, but certain. He began to see light during Peel's lifetime; had long stood aloof from both parties but did not realize that Toryism was a thing neither to be desired nor encouraged until Disraeli became its high priest.

Hawarden church is a large and very fine example of the architecture of the early part of the Sixteenth century, though some parts appear to be older. The rectory is one of the most valuable in the kingdom, and is held by a son of Mr. Gladstone, who is said to be as hardworking and simple in his way of life as Goldsmith's vicar was. The Hawarden estates extend miles along the estuary of the Dee.

During the next five or six years Mr. Gladstone was opposed to his great chief, and it is curious, in view of his present attitude, that he was mentioned as "the rising hope of the Tories." One of his biographers says: "He was always thorough, and being, in these days of partially developed intelligence, a Tory, he was, to borrow a phrase of Dick Swiveller's friend, the Marchioness, 'a out-an'-outer.'" Lord Macaulay described him at this period of his career as "a young man of unblemished character and of distinguished parliamentary talents, the rising hope of those stern and unbending Tories, who follow reluctantly and mutinously a leader whose experience and eloquence are indispensable to them, but whose cautious temper and moderate opinions they abhor." This was just after Mr. Gladstone's essay on "The State in its Relations with the Church," a work whose theory Macaulay described as based upon the proposition that the propagation of religious truth is one of the chief ends of government.

In all directions Gladstone then fought reform, tooth and nail. He opposed a ministerial scheme for dealing with the church rates in deference to the views of the dissenters. He passionately defended negro apprenticeship, the last vestige of slavery permitted in the West Indies. He opposed a scheme of national education in which, as Lord Morpeth put it, "it was declared to be the duty of the state to provide education for dissenters so long as it fingered their gold;" and he fought fiercely in the bill designed to remove the civil disabilities of Jews.

Sir Robert Peel was back in power in 1841 and Gladstone was returned as member for Newark, and held two offices in the ministry, master of the mint and vice-president of the board of trade. Charlotte Williams Wynn, in a letter dated London, Nov. 18, 1841, said: "They say Mr. Gladstone has been given two offices in order, if possible, to keep him quiet, and by giving him too much to do to prevent him from troubling his head about the church. But I know it will be in never forgive Disraeli's bitter attacks on his old friend, Sir Robert Peel. When Disraeli undertook to deal with finance Gladstone pounced upon him, made an end of him and his budget and the ministry of which he was the prop. Lord Derby resigned.

As we understand Liberalism now, Lord Aberdeen could not be called a Liberal; but he was not a Tory—in truth had succeeded the Tories. Gladstone's conversion to Liberalism was slow, but certain. He began to see light during Peel's lifetime; had long stood aloof from both parties but did not realize that Toryism was a thing neither to be desired nor encouraged until Disraeli became its high priest.

The first of what proved to be a long series of budget speeches, unsurpassed in parliamentary history, Mr. Gladstone delivered on the 18th of April, 1853. Then, as on the occasion of his speech on home rule on the 8th of April of the present year, expectation was at its zenith, the house was crowded and jammed, the vast crowd remaining tireless during five hours of astonishingly eloquent oratory, which made even avalanches of statistics attractive. As chancellor of the exchequer he had a surplus of over £750,000. Instead of dribbling this away and leaving matters where they stood, he launched out "with the confident daring of genius," increased taxation, chiefly by manipulation of the income tax, and thereby in a wholesale manner, scarcely less than magical, reduced or abolished the duties on nearly 300 articles of commerce of daily use. The "elasticity of revenue," then entirely novel, though now well established, was the principle upon which he reckoned. The remarkable thing about his first budget was the confidence with which its predictions were accepted. Its resolutions were approved and the reign of sound finance began.

He was the main strength of the Aberdeen ministry, and as chancellor of the exchequer he financed the Crimean war. In 1855, when the coalition fell to pieces and Lord Palmerston undertook to construct a new government out of the fragments, Mr. Gladstone resigned. He remained out of office several years, accomplishing as much work as many men would take a lifetime to do and think they had done well. It was then that he completed and published his "Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age." In 1859 the brief administration of Lord Derby, in which Disraeli had twice held the office of chancellor of the exchequer, came to an end, and Gladstone again joined the ministry formed by Lord Palmerston, which lasted as long as Palmerston lived. There was peace and prosperity throughout this reign, and Gladstone carried out his great schemes of finance, interrupted by the Crimean war five years before. The year 1860 completed the commercial treaty with France, abolished the paper duty, and in his first budget Mr. Gladstone ended the stamp duty. This parliament came to an end in July, 1865. Mr. Gladstone offered himself for re-election at Oxford and was rejected. This event created a profound sensation. South Lancashire offered to secure him a seat, and thither he hastened and stood before its sturdy manufacturers "unmuzzled" as he expressed it. This unmuzzling process had a deep significance for the country.

It was destined to come, sooner or later, as the man grew in Liberalism, and Oxford hastened it. As long as he was politically associated with Oxford, his alma mater, there was a possibility that he might resist the influences that were steadily leading him into uncompromising Liberalism. That chain broken, there was nothing to retard his growth. Every year since has seen him move further away from the grim old tracks of the Toryism he once embraced, and out on the broad path that led to his present altitude.

When Lord Palmerston died Earl Russell succeeded as premier, and Mr. Gladstone was leader of the house of commons, and still held the ministerial office of chancellor of the exchequer. The pent up flood of Liberal life rushed downward like a cataract. A reform bill was to be introduced by Earl Russell, but to Gladstone, as leader of the house, fell the task of introducing it and bearing the brunt of the battle which raged around it. The debate on the second reading of the bill lasted several days. It fell to Mr. Gladstone's lot to wind up the debate, which he did in these true and prophetic words: "You cannot fight against the future. Time is on our side. The great social forces which move onward in their might and majesty, and which the tumult of our debates does not for a moment impede or disturb, those great social forces are against you. They are marshaled on our side, and the banner which we now carry in this fight, though perhaps at some moment it may droop over our sinking heads, yet it soon again will float in the eye of heaven, and will be borne by the firm hands of the united people of the three kingdoms, perhaps not to an easy, but to a certain and a not far distant victory."

the assembled powers in the congress of Berlin. The treaty was signed on July 13, 1878, and Disraeli (then Lord Beaconsfield), returned with his colleague, the Marquis of Salisbury, bearing back with him what he characterized as "Peace with honor."

In 1880 the Beaconsfield cabinet was thrown out, and Gladstone, after much negotiation, was summoned by the queen to form a cabinet. Last year he was himself again thrown out on the renewal of the coercion bill. It is always an Irish issue that dislodges Mr. Gladstone. The Parnellites and Conservatives combined to defeat Gladstone. The Conservative ministry, with Lord Salisbury as premier, lasted about six months and was defeated by a coalition between the Parnellites and Liberals on a bill on allotments for laborers in England. The real cause of the Conservative defeat was the intimation conveyed in the queen's speech that coercion had to be renewed in Ireland. Mr. Gladstone, after much reluctance on the part of the queen, was again called to form a cabinet, and is now awaiting the issue of his bill for home rule for Ireland, a work that will be recognized in history as the bravest act of his wonderful career. On the 8th of April he made his famous speech thereon.

Never did St. Stephens witness an assemblage of people held together by a warmer interest. From 6 o'clock in the morning, the unusually early hour at which Speaker Peel had ordered the doors open, the crowd began to file in. The streets adjacent were so packed that it was all the police could do to preserve a passageway.

The main features of Mr. Gladstone's bill are as follows:

It establishes a parliament at Dublin with a maximum duration of session of five years.

The parliament is to consist of two chambers, one having 103 and the other 206 members. The parliament to have no power to establish any religion as a state church, but will have power to deal with law affecting trade, navigation, coinage, etc. All proceeds of customs and excise duties to be held to meet Irish obligations. The viceroy will be allowed to remain, but to be made a non-political office.

His speech lasted three hours and twenty minutes, and thrilled the world. On its issues are staked his reputation, the life of the Liberal party, the salvation of Ireland and the future of the British empire.

The New York Sun says of it:

We should have to go back more than a century to find a crisis of comparable moment and excitement, whether we look at the dramatic circumstances of the debate, the tremendous import of the theme debated, or the towering ascendancy of the arch-disputant. England stands to-day, with reference to Ireland, in much the same position as that in which she stood in 1775 with relation to her thirteen American colonies. The part essayed by Chatham then is to be played by Gladstone now. For the second time in English history a voice rings out in warning and in prophecy at a juncture big with peril to the nation's integrity and peace.

It was on the 1st of February, 1775, that Chatham, aged and infirm, tried to render a last service to his country, then about to make the fateful choice between concession and coercion, by adjuring it to enter on the path of kindness and of justice. On that day he brought forward what he aptly called his "plan for true reconcilement and national accord," which was in substance a home rule bill sanctioning nearly every demand put forward by the discontented colonies. He besought his fellow legislators to approach his pacificatory project in a spirit of equity and sympathy; he implored them to yield while there was time, and he solemnly forwarned them that they stood at the parting of the ways.

If it be, indeed, the destiny of Gladstone to succumb, what seems his failure will, like Chatham's, far outshine the most splendid achievements of his life. By proclaiming from his place of premier the

The measure was defeated, the ministry resigned and the Earl of Derby again called to form a ministry from a party in a hopeless minority. As soon as parliament met the following year Lord Derby resigned on the plea of ill health, and Disraeli became leader of the Conservative party and prime minister of England. During that session Mr. Gladstone made up his mind that the Irish church should no longer be endured. Early in the session he laid upon the table of the house a series of resolutions, the first of which roundly declared that "in the opinion of the house of commons it is necessary that the established church of Ireland should cease to exist as an establishment." Disraeli finding fighting impossible with the parliament assembled brought about its dissolution and appealed to the country. Gladstone was defeated in Lancashire, but elsewhere the Liberals triumphed, and Gladstone, returned for Greenwich, found himself at the head of an overwhelming majority—"a prime minister personally more powerful than any who had held the reins of state since the palmiest days of Sir Robert Peel."

He at once disestablished the Irish church, and the next year saw the Irish land bill added to the statute books, and the elementary education act passed. The year after saw the army regulation bill passed, embodying the abolition of purchase, which latter Gladstone finally accomplished, in opposition to the house of lords, by invoking the royal warrant. A year later the ballot bill was passed. In the trouble over the university bill Gladstone resigned, and the queen invited Disraeli to form a ministry, which he declined. Mr. Gladstone returned to office, and the session pursued its course.

The country was then so prosperous and comfortable that it began to get restless and think of mischief, and the house of commons became discontented and ill-humored. Gladstone was never popular in manner. His gaze was fixed far above the heads of mortal men. He thought not of gracious little ways for little ends. As he said in one of his issues are staked his reputation, the life of the Liberal party, the salvation of Ireland and the future of the British empire.

The New York Sun says of it:

If it be, indeed, the destiny of Gladstone to succumb, what seems his failure will, like Chatham's, far outshine the most splendid achievements of his life. By proclaiming from his place of premier the justice of home rule, he will have rendered Ireland a moral service of inestimable value, and he will have linked his name to the deferred but inevitable triumph of a righteous cause. He may say, as Chatham said: "This bill, though rejected here, will make its way to the public, to the nation, to the remotest wilds of America; and, however faulty or defective, it will at last manifest how zealous I have been to avert the storms which seem ready to burst upon my country."

In a little book entitled "The British Senate in 1838," published nearly fifty years ago, we find this picture of "the young man eloquent," now "the grand old man" and still eloquent.

"Mr. Gladstone's appearance and manner are much in his favor. He is a fine-looking man. He is about the usual height and of good figure. His countenance is mild and pleasant, and has a highly intellectual expression. His eyes are clear and quick; his eyebrows are dark and rather prominent. There is not a dandy in the house but envies what Truefit would call his fine head of jet black hair. It is always carefully parted from the crown downward to his brow, where it is tastefully shaded. His features are small and regular, and his complexion must be a very unworthy witness if he does not possess an abundant stock of health. In gesture he is varied, but not violent. When he rises he generally puts both his hands behind his back, and having there suffered them to embrace each other for a short time, he unclasps them and allows them to drop on either side. Having granted them a momentary repose there, they are again put in motion, and in a few seconds they are seen reposing vis-a-vis on his breast. He moves his face and body from one direction to another, not forgetting to bestow a liberal share of attention on his own party. He is listened to with much attention by the house, and appears to

A year later the ballot bill was passed. In the trouble over the university bill Gladstone resigned, and the queen invited Disraeli to form a ministry, which he declined. Mr. Gladstone returned to office, and the session pursued its course.

The country was then so prosperous and comfortable that it began to get restless and think of mischief, and the house of commons became discontented and ill-humored. Gladstone was never popular in manner. His gaze was fixed far above the heads of mortal men. He thought not of gracious little ways for little ends. As he said in one of his speeches, he had in view "no meaner or narrower object than the welfare of the empire at large." He was no match for his great rival, Disraeli, in the little courtesies which win little minds, and so his star declined.

In the session of 1872, the lassitude of parliament was so great that the Irish university bill completed its destruction. The session wrangled on to the end. Assailed from within and without, dispirited, but hopeful of the verdict of a nation whose behests he had splendidly fulfilled, Mr. Gladstone, on the eve of the assembling of parliament, in January, 1874, cut the Gordian knot. The country woke up one morning to find that parliament was dissolved. The Liberals were everywhere defeated, and Disraeli, meeting parliament, found himself in almost exactly the same position Gladstone had been when meeting parliament in 1869.

In 1875 arose the insurrection in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which brought on the war between Russia and Turkey. Mr. Gladstone had announced his retirement from politics, and surrendered the leadership of the Liberal party, to which the Marquis of Hartington succeeded. Inspired by the wonderful letters of MacGahan, the famous war correspondent of The London Daily News, he roused Europe on the "Bulgarian Atrocities," in a campaign through Midlothian. He threw himself into the cause of the oppressed Bulgarians with an energy that astonished even those who knew him best. He wrote pamphlets, made speeches and again caught the ear of the majority by urging that England was grossly neglecting her duty, and "ought to put a stop to the anarchical misrule, the murdering which still desolated Bulgaria."

But the actual outbreak of the war between Russia and Turkey alarmed England. Disraeli saw his chance and took it. When the Russian armies finally defeated the Turks and drew near to Constantinople, Disraeli sent the English fleet to protect the city and landed an Indian contingent in Malta. This movement was regarded as a sign of battle, and to preserve the peace of Europe, the treaty of San Stefano, which was arranged between Gen. Ignatieff and the hated Turks, was laid on the table to be discussed before

He is listened to with much attention by the house, and appears to be highly respected by men of all parties."

Similar mannerisms mark his orations today. When he rises and begins what is intended to be a great oration, he has a tendency to clasp his hands behind his back. This attitude, however, like the subdued mood of which it is an indication, prevails only during the opening sentences. Age has fired rather than dulled his oratorical energy. He has grown more rapid in gesture. The jet black hair of forty-eight years ago has faded and fallen, leaving only a few thin wisps of gray carefully disposed over the grandly formed head, with which London hatters have had such trouble. The rounded cheeks are sunken, and their bloom has given place to pallor, the full brow is wrinkled, the dark eyes, bright and flashing still, are underset with innumerable wrinkles; the "good figure" is somewhat rounded at the shoulders, and the sprightly step is growing deliberate. But the intellectual fire of fifty years ago is rather quickened than quenched, and the promise of health has been abundantly fulfilled in a maintenance of physical strength and activity that seems phenomenal. He can outsit the youngest member of the house, he can speak for over three hours at a stretch, and he will put into the three hours as much mental and physical energy as, judiciously distributed, would suffice for the whole debate. His magnificent voice is as true in tone, and as insensible to fatigue, as when it was first heard within the walls of the house.

Trembling through every nerve with intensity of conviction and the wrath of battle, he almost literally smites his opponent hip and thigh. Taking the brass-bound box upon the table as representative of "the right honorable gentleman" or "the noble lord" opposite, he will beat it violently with his right hand, creating a resounding noise that sometimes makes it difficult to catch the words he desires to emphasize. Or, standing with heels closely pressed together, and feet spread out fan-wise, so that he may turn as on a pivot to watch the effect of his speech on either side of the house, he will assume that the palm of his left hand is his adversary of the moment, and straightway

he beats upon it with his right hand with a ferocity that causes to curdle the blood of the occupants of the ladies' gallery. Mr. George Barnett Smith, in his admirable "Life of Gladstone," says:

"Mr. Gladstone, in his time, has played many parts; but in none have his English good sense and manliness, his sagacity and his deep moral feeling been so conspicuous as in his addresses upon education and kindred subjects. His political friends and opponents alike find here common ground upon which to pay him just tribute. To the working classes especially have his addresses been most valuable. He has recalled them from the pursuit of social and industrial will-'o-the-wisps, while he has at the same time acknowledged their right to combine in every lawful manner for their well being and prosperity. He has striven to show that labor, the universal lot of man, is honorable, and that social drones are the most prolific source of danger to the commonwealth. And while he has thus enjoined the value and sacredness of labor by the wise and useful legislation which he has initiated, he has enabled the working man to treasure up the fruits of that labor, and to make provision for old age. He has insisted upon the high and noble results which follow from culture and self-improvement, counseling the toilers in factories and workshops that these are to be sought not alone for the material advantages they may bring, but for that deeper and richer good which follows upon the development of the mental and moral faculties. He has urged the people onward in the path of real progress, and has shown them how, by self-denying and strenuous effort, they may enjoy for themselves and extend to others the blessings of a robust and Christian civilization."

His extraordinary vitality and endurance are due, doubtless, to his strong interest in life, which is of itself a preservative, and to his simple, healthful, abstemious habits. What young man could have shown more energy than he manifested in 1879 in his campaign in Scotland?

In the November of an extremely cold winter, on the eve of his 70th birthday, he set out on the Midlothian campaign, and in the two weeks addressed over 75,000 persons, making a triumphal progress that finally landed him at a higher pinnacle of fame and endowed him with a supremer measure of power than he had ever before grasped.

He has taken care at all times to fit himself for his gigantic intellectual labors by bodily

His extraordinary vitality and endurance are due, doubtless, to his strong interest in life, which is of itself a preservative, and to his simple, healthful, abstemious habits. What young man could have shown more energy than he manifested in 1879 in his campaign in Scotland?

In the November of an extremely cold winter, on the eve of his 70th birthday, he set out on the Midlothian campaign, and in the two weeks addressed over 75,000 persons, making a triumphal progress that finally landed him at a higher pinnacle of fame and endowed him with a supremer measure of power than he had ever before grasped.

He has taken care at all times to fit himself for his gigantic intellectual labors by bodily exercise. His bodily labors have been something far beyond the constitutional ride or walk; he was known, at all events until lately, as a pedestrian who would quietly take long walks in the Scottish Highlands from which many young men would shrink, and then he bears a world-wide reputation as a woodsman.

With the ax he attacks the trees in Hawarden park with the same energy that he demolished a political opponent. One beech tree, thirteen feet in circumference, fell before his ax after six hours of stupendous exertion.

Literarily Mr. Gladstone has been as active as politically. His chief intellectual recreation has been the study of Homer—to solve the problems associated with the name of the "blind old man of Scio's rocky isle." The results of his labors in this direction have taken form in three large volumes entitled "Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age." Not merely as a recreation has the study of the prince of poets been to him, but a means by which himself and other men may be made wiser and better. Setting aside his various works upon Homer, his miscellaneous writings of themselves, with the reading they involve, would entitle him to rank, on the score of industry, with many who have devoted their entire lifetime to literature.

Neither in his writings nor speeches does he show any humor, though he has a rich fund of sarcasm. A joke is an unknown quantity to him. Life is wholly earnest and never flippant with him. Fluency is said to be his besetting literary sin. His social sin is carelessness in regard to his attire. If his wife doesn't watch him closely he goes about with a shocking bad hat and disreputable umbrella. The other day in the house he astonished everybody by looking extremely spruce

The other day in the house he astonished everybody by looking extremely spruce and wearing a rose and bit of shamrock in his buttonhole. If he can't be found at home or attending to his public duties he is sure to be mousing round some old second-hand book store.

He attacked this country during the late war, and has lived to repent of it, as did Carlyle, who admitted that he had been mistaken, which was as near repentance as he ever got.

Mr. Gladstone is said to be most benevolent, his generosity being of the kind which gives the best—his most precious time as well as his less precious money. He is in character and ability the greatest man in England, if not the greatest man living today. The following tribute, taken from The New York Sun, shall close this meagre tribute to greatness

MASONIC.—D. D. G. M., M. C. Ginness of Belleville visited Maple Leaf Lodge No. 119 on Monday evening, 10th inst., and reviewed the work of the brethren. A very pleasant and highly instructive evening was spent. The brethren of Maple Leaf look forward with pleasure to meeting the distinguished brother at Newburgh during the winter where he purposes holding a lodge of instruction. The following are the officers of Maple Leaf for the ensuing year:—Bro. J. Fleming, W.M.; Bro. F. W. Armstrong, S. W.: Bro. L. A. Aylesworth, J.W.; Bro. C. B. Huffman, Treas.; Bro. C. L. Rogers, Sec.: Bro. J. C. Murray, S.D.; Bro. M. Cronin, J.D.; Bro. R. Mott, Chap.; Bro. R. M. Brisco, I.G.; Bro. J. McLaird, Tyler. W. Bro. Maxwell Robinson, our retiring Master, has ably filled the position assigned to him during the past two years, and retires with much honour.

MUNICIPAL.—There is no doubt Dr. R. Kennedy will be returned by acclamation to represent this municipalityfor 1884 as Reeve. He is deservedly popular and fills the bill to the entire satisfaction of our ratepayers. There will, no doubt, be some changes among our Councillors, although those now in office have done their duty well. Rumour hath it that Mr. Robt. Anderson will seek election as Councillor, and there are others spoken of as likely to come to the front nomination day. We await the result hoping we will have a stirring time on election day.

—One by one the old landmarks are being removed by that unappeasable monster, Death. We have this week to chronicle the death of Mr. John Macdowell, of this village, who departed this life on Monday evening, the 10th inst. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. Elliott on the following Wednesday.

—Our young folks turned out en masse to the re-opening services at Newburgh on Sabbath last.

—Real estate has been moving at a wonderful rate here this week. No less than five sales are reported, viz., Charles Riley, shoe shop, house and lot to Thos. Hamilton; Joseph Robinson, house and lot, to Thomas McNaught: Samuel Jackson, lot, to Samuel Greenway, and house and lot to Beagle Parrott. Thos Glover has also sold a lot. Keep the ball rolling.

PERSONAL.—We are pleased to be able to say our old friend Alex. Dickson, whose departure to Kingsey Mills we chronicled a few weeks ago, has decided to return to Camden East. Welcome back.....Mr. Lawrence Hogeboom and Mr. William Skinner have returned home from Manitoba.....Mr. Carlos Mendell, of Brighton, well known through these counties as a vocalist, has been spending a week with friends in this vicinity. He returned home on Tuesday... Dr. Bicknell is visiting his son Allen in Michigan these days.....Mr. and Miss Sproule are spending the winter with friends

James Cumberland; Recorder, James McMillan; Receiver, Jas. S. Neilson; Financier, Stephen K. Tugwell; Guide, Wm. McMaster; I. Watchman, Wm. Allan: O. do., William Glenn; Trustees, R. Fleming, R. A. —A Christmas Tree will be exhibited in the M. E. Church on Xmas Eve in behalf of the Sunday School.

—Mrs. Powers, formerly Miss Brown, has returned from California after an absence of several years.

—Miss Stella Martin has resigned her school at No. 5, and accepted the school at Wesley Church, north of Newburgh, for next year.

—It is understood that Mr. Lyman has been engaged to conduct our school for 1884. Miss Vandusen will be very likely retained also. There was no school on Wednesday from lack of wood at the school house, and the small boys expressed their pleasure by singing, "No school to-day. Yip! yip!"

—The oyster supper at Lonsdale Tuesday evening was successful considering the unfavorable weather and roads. The Misses McCullough, Miss Stella Martin and Mr. Lyman entertained the audience with music and recitations, and Rev. Mr. Ferguson made a good speech.

—The hay scales (Fairbanks' make) have been completed. Mr. Z. VanLuven was the first to patronize them by weighing his thoroughbred cattle. His bull, which was three years old in May last, tipped them at 1,925 pounds.

—Mr. J. C. Maybee, our esteemed head school teacher, informs us he intends leaving for Kingston on Jan. 1, where he intends studying for a doctor. He has been engaged teaching here for six years, at a salary of $480, during which time he has given general satisfaction. Miss Lucy Wheeler's services, too, have given universal satisfaction in the school. She has been engaged for another year. Moscow and vicinity boasts of having one of the best schools, the most fast horses, top buggies, pretty girls and pays the highest land tax of any other place in the county.

—A very successful missionary meeting was held here on Tuesday evening of last week. The speakers were Rev. Mr. Drew, Rev. Mr. Bates, of Tamworth, Rev. Mr. Lawrence, of Arden. Since then a person is accosted about a dozen times a day and asked for at least 5c.

—The daily stage will commence to run from Camden East here on Jan. 1.

—The cars are expected to reach the village on Xmas sure.

As L. A. Carscallen and A. H. H engaged for some time in formu against the persons who were m several subordinate Granges con Lennox and Addington Division years 1876, 1877 and 1878, and contemporary, the Standard, last week said: "THE EXPRESS does not attempt to justify and cannot justify its recent publication of blasphemous and indecent literature. What choice reading to put into the hands of children, etc." That kind of hash has been served up by the old dame in several of its recent issues, but it is altogether too thin, and is only an attempt to trail the herring across the track. Every honest reader of both journals, even the more intelligent Conservatives, will hold in the utmost contempt the simulated indignation of the Standard over the publication of this offensive matter, while it has no word of censure for the author of these abominable blasphemies: and will feel that THE EXPRESS has placed the whole community under obligation for bringing these abominations into the light of day. The Standard would condone the original offence, and even place its author in positions of solemn trust and responsibility, provided it could be kept in the dark.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

POLITICAL.—We are much pleased to know that Mr. Bowen E. Aylesworth is again in the field for re-election as councillor for the township of Ernesttown for the ensuing year. He has served the township faithfully and with great ability during the present year, and his many friends were of opinion that he should allow himself to be put in nomination for the deputy reeveship at the coming election. He, however, thought differently, preferring rather to serve his township as councillor for another term in order that he might familiarize himself more fully with the work in hand prior to his being advanced to any higher station. At the council sessions he has shown executive ability far in advance of many of the older members of the board, and it was on this account that his friends urged his advancement. His refusal "to go up higher" shows extreme modesty and good common sense and makes him more popular than ever. That he is the "coming man" in the township is patent to all, and he has only to bide his time to enjoy all the honors the electors of his native township have in their power to bestow.

OYSTER SUPPER.—Nial P. Wood, Esq., the retiring Warden of Lennox, treated his constituents to oysters at Sproule's hotel a few evenings since, and a very enjoyable time was spent. Many "after supper speeches" were indulged in, eulogistic of this gentleman's career as a public man, to all of which he replied in a neat and effective speech, thanking them for the sentiments uttered and declaring that as the height of his ambition had been reached he "Wood" now retires from the arena of politics.

OUR TEACHER.—Mr. Manning, teacher of School Section No. 10 of this place, held a very creditable examination on Thursday of last week in the school room. Many parents were present and expressed themselves well pleased with the progress made by their children under his tuition. He has been re-engaged for 1884 at a salary of half a thousand. More power to him.

A Distressing Death.

[Belleville Ontario.]

A young woman aged 23 years, daughter of Mr. Thos. Steen, of Campbellford, died very suddenly on Friday evening last under very distressing circumstances. It appears that the young woman has been keeping company with a heartless villain, who through promise of marriage succeeded in affecting her ruin. A child was born about five weeks ago. Her lover was still in the habit of visiting the house of her parents and of renewing his promise that as soon as she was strong enough, etc., they would be married: these promises were kept up till the day before her death, when on that day he was married to another in the city of Belleville. On the following day Miss Steen became acquainted with the news, and after partaking of her supper in her usual health retired for the night, but on approaching her bedroom in company with her sister, staggered and fell, when the vital spark fled in a few seconds without a struggle. Her remains were interred at the West Burying Grounds Sunday last, and were followed by a large number of relatives and friends. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved parents in their sad affliction.

Highly Agreeable.

One very valuable feature of Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup is, that it is highly agreeable to take, and all varieties of worms, tape worm included, can be safely expelled by it without recourse to harsh and sickening drugs.

IN THAT CONDITION OF THE SYSTEM KNOWN as "used up," whether the vital forces have been exhausted by dissipation and bad habits; or by protracted mental exertion, brain worry and over-work, Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya is of extraordinary efficacy. The nervous system feels its sustaining power immediately, and that depression of spirits which so prostrates and kills, is removed, and elasticity and energy of mind results. It is truly marvellous to witness the rapidity and certainty with which Phosphates supply the waste of tissues and restore vitality to all the organs of the body. They are the only medicinal agents known to science that at the same time modify and control diseased action, and furnish material for building up bone, muscle and nerve.

SIMULATED INDIGNATION.—Our amiable contemporary, the Standard, last week said: "THE EXPRESS does not attempt to justify and cannot justify its recent publication of blasphemous and indecent literature. What choice reading to put into the hands of children, etc." That kind of hash has been served up by the old dame in several of its recent issues, but it is altogether too thin, and is only an attempt to trail the herring across the track. Every honest reader of both journals, even the more intelligent Conservatives, will hold in the utmost contempt the simulated indignation of the Standard over the publication of this offensive matter, while it has no word of censure for the author of these abominable blasphemies: and will feel that THE EXPRESS has placed the whole community under obligation for bringing these abominations into the light of day. The Standard would condone the original offence, and even place its author in positions of solemn trust and responsibility, provided it could be kept in the dark.

McEntyre's Corners.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

POLITICAL.—We are much pleased to know that Mr. Bowen E. Aylesworth is again in the field for re-election as councillor for the township of Ernesttown for the ensuing year. He has served the township faithfully and with great ability during the present year, and his many friends were of opinion that he should allow himself to be put in nomination for the deputy reeveship at the coming election. He, however, thought differently, preferring rather to serve his township as councillor for another term in order that he might familiarize himself more fully with the work in hand prior to his being advanced to any higher station. At the council sessions he has shown executive ability far in advance of many of the older members of the board, and it was on this account that his friends urged his advancement. His refusal "to go up higher" shows extreme modesty and good common sense and makes him more popular than ever. That he is the "coming man" in the township is patent to all, and he has only to bide his time to enjoy all the honors the electors of his native township have in their power to bestow.

How Long?

How many years will it be, I wonder,
And how will their slow length pass
Till I shall find rest in silence under
The trees and the waving grass

Many there be in the world who love it,
Who cling to its trifles and toys;
But I could never see aught to covet
Among its vanishing joys.

But once indeed was my heart elated
And pleased with a dream of its own—
A beautiful dream it was, but fated
Soon to be overthrown.

Death, like a shadow, fell and darkened
The light that had shone so clear—
How oft since then have I vainly hearkened
And prayed for his coming near!

But he cometh not, and I only wonder
How will the long years pass
Till I shall find rest in silence under
The trees and the waving grass?

CUPIDITY AND CRIME.

Chapter III.

"My dear Nora," Mrs. Bruce cried, as Nora entered the room a little flushed with her quick walk, "Lord de Gretton has been here nearly an hour!"

"Has he? I am sorry, Lord de Gretton," the girl said, turning to him as she spoke; "but I took a book up to the woods, and did not notice how the time went."

He just touched her hand with his long slender fingers, murmured a few words in the cold, clear voice that Mrs. Bruce called "truly aristocratic," but that always grated disagreeably on his betrothed's ear, and scanned her in a way that made her feel at once how warm, untidy, and unpresentable she was.

And, indeed, in her tumbled holland dress, with various sun-scorched grasses and bits of tangled moss clinging to its far from spotless frillings, with her black hair dropping on her shoulders, and her face tanned with the sun, she did present a sufficiently strong contrast to her daintily-dressed step-sister and even to her cool, calm lover. She colored angrily at the thought, and glanced up with incipient defiance at the well-cut, frozen-looking face. Lord de Gretton had been a handsome man in his younger days, was a handsome man still—so people said; and in a sense they were right, though to his promised wife there was something curiously snake-like and repellant in his aspect.

A tall, slender man, with a small, well-shaped head crowned with hair which he was too wise to dye, high, thin features aristocratically curved, rather small green-gray eyes, sunken a little, but still singularly quick and bright, a long grey moustache, long, slender hands and feet, and teeth that as works of art were perfect—of milliners and dressmakers all toiling at the trousseau of the future Lady de Gretton and making a lay-figure of the present Miss Bruce flitted before his well-pleased eyes. But she knew also how lamentably she had failed in this duty, and answered, with reckless, discourteous candor—

"Oh, no; Mrs. Bruce and Cristine have had all the work! I have chosen nothing."

The smooth face darkened significantly; but Lord de Gretton turned to the two women with the smile of conventional courtesy which he produced at will.

"Mrs. Bruce and Miss Singleton are too good; but——"

"But this naughty child is too lazy. I quite agree with your lordship. Still, she has great confidence in our taste, and Cristine takes a real artistic pleasure in the task of selection; so, after all, the freak of our dear little wilful Nora is not so surprising."

With the words she came over from her table, and gave her step-daughter an endearing fan-tap, intended, the girl knew, partly to call her to order and partly to show the easy and affectionate terms on which they stood. Cristine, who had taken a seat in the distant window, and worked on in silence through the whole discussion, raised her fair head from the tapestry-frame and listened with a curious sort of smile.

"Nothing is surprising, my dear Mrs. Bruce; but some things are a little odd," Lord de Gretton answered blandly; "and perhaps this fancy of dear Nora's may be classed among them."

"Do you wish me to choose my own dresses?" Nora asked abruptly—she was weary of being discussed and apologised for in her own presence, and thought the point-blank question would stop that at least.

"I should be glad to see your taste exercised, certainly."

"Then it shall be in future," she said, and fully intended to keep the promise thus made. One part of her marriage-vow she could keep faithfully—in all things she would obey Lord de Gretton, if she could give him neither love nor honor.

He seemed satisfied with the words, ungracious and ungrateful as they were, and thanked her in his old-fashioned, courtly way.

"And now," he added, with a smile which in its graciousness included Mrs. Bruce and Cristine—"now that you have promised to show some interest in a subject that to most girls would be absorbing, I may venture to offer—my little gift."

He placed a jewel-case on the girl's lap and leaned back the better to contemplate her anticipated raptures. Mrs. Bruce bent forward eagerly, her stout form all quivering with eagerness, her bright

"You should not tire yourself, Nora," he said, with a sudden gentleness, at which Mrs. Bruce looked immensely relieved.

Perhaps something in the gray eyes had warned him not to go too far while Nora was still free. Whatever the cause, the look of stern displeasure passed away; he drew forward a low chair, fetched a cup of tea from the Queen Anne table at which Mrs. Bruce, in her smartest tea-gown, was presiding, and ministered to the girl's wants with courteous care, while her step-mother, with adoring eyes, followed his every movement.

Nora sipped her tea, feeling wretchedly guilty and restless, now that she could no longer comfort herself with a justifiable anger. Of course, she had beha ed badly—she always did now, she thought. Having made a bargain with Lord de Gretton, she was bound in honor to fulfil her share of the contract. She knew that he was coming; as his promised wife she should have been there to meet him, decked out in her best, fresh, bright, and smiling, with an eager welcome in her eyes.

In such fashion she had met Arthur Beaupre, needing no teaching then—to make herself fair in his sight had been so glad and easy a task. Then she was proud indeed to see that the face reflected in the cracked old mirror was fresh and fair as the dew-washed roses she pinned at her white throat or in her soft, blue-black hair. Then she rejoiced that the happy eyes were big and darkly gray, that the tall girl-figure was slender and graceful. Now——

"My dear Nora, you are cold," Lord de Gretton said, taking the hot hand in his own cool clasp, and regarding the girl with much anxiety. "No, your pulse is over-quick; and yet I saw you shiver!"

He placed a jewel-case on the girl's lap and leaned back the better to contemplate her anticipated raptures. Mrs. Bruce bent forward eagerly, her stout form all quivering with eagerness, her bright black eyes aglow; even Cristine abandoned her picturesque frame, and came forward, with her graceful, gliding step a little quickened, drawn to the jewels as the steel is drawn to the magnetic stone.

With cold and trembling fingers, with a heart that was colder still, Nora Bruce raised the satin-lined lid, and disclosed such a flashing radiance of prismatic light as fairly dazzled her. She had seen few diamonds in her life; the fiery snake that curled around her slim finger and announced her to all the world as Lord de Gretton's property had seemed a costly jewel to the three women; it would hardly have been noticed in this gleaming coruscation.

Mrs. Bruce looked at them, closed her eyes, and gave one breathless gasp. Cristine slipped down gently to her knees, touching the costly gems with timidly reverent fingers. Never had she knelt in such honest worship before. Her cold eyes actually softened, and there came a faint pink color into the fair pale cheeks.

"Bracelets, Nora, collarette, and earrings!" she cried in a hushed ecstasy. "Oh, Nora, you happy, happy girl!"

"Happy indeed!" Mrs. Bruce added fervently. "Often and often in other days have I heard speak of the De Gretton diamonds. These are they, I suppose?"

"They are re-set for the latest and loveliest lady of the line," his lordship said, with his quaint, old-fashioned gallantry. Their unmeasured admiration delighted him—it was the effect he had calculated on producing. Then he turned to Nora. "And you, Nora? What have you to say?"

What could the dazed girl say? Her heart ached with a dull, cruel pain; the lustre of the jewels seemed to scorch her like a living flame. Lovely as they were, they seemed, in that moment, the actual chains of her wedded slavery, and she shrank from them with a helpless, childish terror.

"Some one has walked over my grave, perhaps," she said, with a forlorn attempt at mingled ease and smartness. And then she suddenly remembered that her grave would be in the ancestral vault of the De Grettons, a vast and ponderous edifice of brick and stone, iron-clamped and ivy-covered ; and the thought of any profane intruder scrambling over that exclusive resting place caused her to laugh insanely.

"Nora has not been very well lately," Mrs. Bruce broke in, with such a desperate glance as only made the girl laugh with more hysteric passion.

"So I see," Lord de Gretton answered quietly—he had taken his place beside her now, had thrown one arm across the back of her chair in an easy, proprietorial fashion that made Nora wince and sit more upright than she had ever sat before—and he kept his strangely bright eyes fixed upon her face. "A little thin and a little pale, for all the sunburn, and, I think, a little hysterical," he said, slowly. "Has she seen a doctor, Mrs. Bruce?"

"Oh, no, no!" Nora interrupted, in vehement protest, before Mrs. Bruce could begin her smiling, deprecatory answer. "I never was better in my life, Lord de Gaetton ; and the sight of a doctor always makes me ill."

Lord de Gretton elevated his brows in gentle toleration of her vehemence—why, Nora wondered, did he wish to marry a girl who jarred upon him so continually?—and said, pleasantly enough :

"We will take the patient's word, then, and dismiss the thought of a doctor. Perhaps you have been overworked this week."

She knew what he meant—that visions touching the costly gems with timidly reverent fingers. Never had she knelt in such honest worship before. Her cold eyes actually softened, and there came a faint pink color into the fair pale cheeks.

"They are very beautiful!" she said, awkwardly. Then, seeing that the words or tone somehow disappointed him, she added deprecatingly, "They are thrown away on me, you know. I am too ignorant to appreciate such royal splendors."

His face cleared instantly ; he took the case from her, placed it upon the table, and, lifting the heavy necklet that flashed like flame within his slim, white fingers, made as though he would clasp it round her throat. But she grew very pale, and drew back quickly.

"Oh, no, no!" Nora cried in vehement protest, while her face flushed hotly under the cold displeasure of his look. "Not on me—on this dress! Let Cristine try them on."

Cristine, in her cool, fair beauty, in her well-fitting, daintily neat white dress, certainly looked a more fitting wearer for the costly gems, and she was not reluctant to relieve her sister of the proposed task. She shook her blonde head indeed, and uttered a little protesting "Oh!" but her eyes turned eagerly to Lord de Gretton, and she looked decidedly disappointed when he pushed the casket angrily away from him, and said, with a heavy frown—

"I have no right to trouble Miss Singleton."

"Oh, Cristine would be most happy, I am sure! Would you not, my dear?" Mrs. Bruce put in, in a little flutter of delighted amiability, and with an eager glance across to Cristine.

But, neither heeding the obliging answer nor waiting for Miss Singleton's reply, his lordship went on savagely, never shifting his frozen-looking eyes from Nora's face—must admit I thought that you would take sufficient interest in the jewels to endure the slight fatigue of fastening them on."

"And she will, of course," Mrs. Bruce broke in eagerly. She suffered daily tortures in her dread that the brilliant match which was to do so much for the Bruce and Singleton families would somehow be broken off, and spared no pains to make Nora docile and amenable to the will of her future lord.

"The foolish child is dazzled by the jewels, Lord de Gretton. You forget what a little school-girl she is. Come, Nora dear, let me make you as brilliant as the fairy-queen herself."

Nora yielded then, of course; and, almost before she knew what her stepmother was about, the necklet was clasped on, the braeelets fastened, the pendant-butterflies drawn through the girl's ears, and, with a final laugh of triumph, Mrs. Bruce placed the glittering tiara on the wind-blown dusky locks.

"Now, foolish child, look at the splendors you shrank from!" she cried, as she drew Nora to the big oak-framed mirror on which the full sunlight fell.

The girl raised her eyes, and for the moment could hardly believe that it was indeed Nora Bruce she looked upon. That nature had been kind to her she knew; but the girl who looked back from the mirror with wide gray eyes of solemn wonder wore her novel splendors with a right royal grace. What mattered the shabby holland dress when the form it clothed was so stately in its young slimness? What matter that the blue-black hair rippled untidily when the small head it crowned uplifted itself so proudly beneath that other crown of living light?

The diamonds flashed and glittered in the sunshine till they made her eyes ache; but her own beauty dazzled her more. There was no vanity in that heart-sick recognition of a supreme self-owned charm. For the first time she understood her power over a cold, selfish man like Lord de Gretton—understood how it was that he had wandered from his own world and stooped to woo with passionate persistency a wife from another sphere. And, understanding that, she hated her own face because it was fair, and turned from the glass with something like loathing and disgust.

"My beautiful Nora!" Lord de Gretton said proudly. Her obedience had quite restored his amiability; his cold eyes lighted up with unmistakable approval and a look of proud possession that sent a cold thrill through the girl's veins. "What do you say, Mrs. Bruce? Do the diamonds suit her?"

"As though she were born to them!" Mrs. Bruce answered, enthusiastically. "But I always did say that our dear Nora had a sort of regal look, as though she

"Then Lord de Gretton's wife will be the wickedest of women," Cristine declared lightly, "for, if I know her, Nora will forget her dead lover only when she herself is dead. She is making a bargain, you know, and, to do her justice, she has never professed to give her lord and master any sort of love. As it is, I believe the conscience-stricken little fool half expects that Arthur will break in upon the sacrificial rite somewhat after the fashion of Alonzo the Brave, and bear her away to the tomb."

"Cristine, how can you talk so horribly!" Mrs. Bruce interrupted, with a shudder. "Do ring for tea, and see who has called to-day."

Cristine obeyed both orders—touched the silver bell, and drew the ormolu tray towards her, turning over the various cards with negligent haste.

It was a very different list of names from that she had been wont to read in the old Nettleton days. The Bruces' visiting-list had increased enormously since, by Lord de Gretton's desire, they had taken the furnished house at South Kensington from which Nora's wedding was to take place. Titles were common here as "Misses" had been in the old china dish at Nettleton, and, though Mrs. Bruce still approached the ennobling "handles" with a species of awe, Cristine, being younger and more adaptable, had soon learned to rattle them off with well-bred indifference.

"Sir Walter and Lady Tresham, Mrs. Grant, Lady Villiers, Mr. Cameron Maxwell, and—mother!—Lady Olivia Blake."

The first three or four names were read off in a clear, low monotone as names of small account—the last without a trace of affectation. Cristine's fair face actually flushed with a sort of excitement as with a significant laugh she looked across the table. Mrs. Bruee stared half sleepily back.

"I am very stupid, I dare say, Cristine," she said apologetically; "but there have been so many callers lately, and"—drawing herself up a little—"so many 'Ladies' and 'Honorables' among them that I cannot quite say I know which was Lady Olivia Blake."

"Oh!" Cristine shook her bright head impatiently; but, as the footman just then brought in the tea, she bit her pretty under-lip, and kept in the irreverent words with which her mother's dense stupidity would otherwise have been rebuked. Hardly had the door closed upon him, however, when she cried almost indignantly—

"Surely, mother, you cannot forget her name?"

Mrs. Bruce looked depressed, and quietly sipped her tea, and searched her memory in vain.

her power over a cold, selfish man like Lord de Gretton—understood how it was that he had wandered from his own world and stooped to woo with passionate persistency a wife from another sphere. And, understanding that, she hated her own face because it was fair, and turned from the glass with something like loathing and disgust.

"My beautiful Nora !" Lord de Gretton said proudly. Her obedience had quite restored his amiability ; his cold eyes lighted up with unmistakable approval and a look of proud possession that sent a cold thrill through the girl's veins. "What do you say, Mrs. Bruce ? Do the diamonds suit her ?"

"As though she were born to them !" Mrs. Bruce answered, enthusiastically. "But I always did say that our dear Nora had a sort of regal look, as though she were destined to some higher fate."

In spite of herself, Nora smiled at her step-mother's ecstacies. Until Lord de Gretton came upon the scene she had to all appearance been disposed to think the girl's destiny was to play second in every way to her own daughter, to perform all duties that Cristine neglected, and retire into the background whenever that young lady chose to come to the front.

But all things had changed since the engagement—nothing more marvellously than Mrs. Bruce's estimate of the attractions and rights of her husband's only child.

Chapter IV.

"Dear me, Cristine, I shall be glad when it is all over !" Mrs. Bruce said, as she threw her lace parasol upon the nearest sofa, her gloves upon the table, and her portly person into a big arm-chair.

"So shall I," Cristine returned, with her clear, short laugh that always suggested something disagreeable in reserve. "As you may imagine, it is not pleasant for me, everywhere and with everybody, to play second fiddle to Nora Bruce."

Mrs. Bruce paused in her occupation of fanning herself to survey her daughter anxiously. Miss Singleton presented a notable contrast to her over-heated parent ; a long afternoon of shopping and visiting had left her quite cold and calm. She looked very fair and tranquil in her dainty dress of peacock-blue, with the pale blue feather resting on her bright hair.

"It is hard, dear," the mother said, with heartfelt sympathy, "and not what we expected, of course. Still it is to be, and we must make the best of it. Forget that it is Nora Bruce we have to deal with, and think only of what Lady de Gretton can do for us all."

Miss Singleton shrugged her graceful shoulders, and showed all her pretty teeth in an undisguised yawn.

"How you do prose, mother !" she cried impatiently. "Of course I remember that always, or I should not tolerate her at all. I have no patience with the scham-she said apologetically ; "but there have been so many callers lately, and"—drawing herself up a little—"so many 'Ladies' and 'Honorables' among them that I cannot quite say I know which was Lady Olivia Blake."

"Oh !" Cristine shook her bright head impatiently ; but, as the footman just then brought in the tea, she bit her pretty under-lip, and kept in the irreverent words with which her mother's dense stupidity would otherwise have been rebuked. Hardly had the door closed upon him, however, when she cried almost indignantly—

"Surely, mother, you cannot forget her name ?"

Mrs. Bruce looked depressed, and quietly sipped her tea, and searched her memory in vain.

"When did she call, dear, and who is she ?"

"I have not heard of her calling, and she is Lord de Gretton's cousin. Don't you remember, mother, what Mrs. Maynian told us about her at the Dorntons' garden-party—what the Universe said ?"

With a startled and uncomfortable look Mrs. Bruce set down her cup.

"Good gracious, yes ! And she has really called ! She was engaged to him, was she not ?"

Cristine shook her head with a very sceptical air.

"Hardly that, I think, or she would have held him by a stronger chain and made a more open proclamation of her wrongs. No ; he flirted with her desperately, there is no doubt of that. She is wonderfully handsome still, though the Peerage reveals the awkward fact that she is nearly five-and-thirty. Mrs. Maynian says he was like her shadow all last year, and he even allowed her to wear the De Gretton diamonds—indeed the story goes that the first hint she had of his perfidy was his taking the jewels back to have them reset for Nora."

"Hush—here is Nora !" Mrs. Bruce, who had been listening with open-eyed and open-mouthed interest, suddenly returned to her cup as her step-daughter came into the room.

"My dear, she bears her greatness very meekly," the elder woman said, in an apologetic tone. "I am sure she might turn the tables on you and me, if she chose, Crissie ; but she moves about like a shadow, and hardly cares to have a will of her own."

"I hate her for that," Cristine broke in,
with sudden fury that startled her mother.
"She has and takes all that this world can give her, yet she goes about with a martyr's air, as though her thoughts were centred wholly in the next. She means to marry Lord de Gretton next week, yet she cries her eyes out every night, as though she were Arthur Beaupre's new-made widow."

"Oh, hush, Cristine !" Mrs. Bruce cried quickly, while her big black eyes wandered in an alarmed fashion round the gorgeous, unfamiliar room. "You know I never speak of poor Arthur to her, and she may hear you now."

"She cannot hear me, for the excellent reason that she is up-stairs in her own room, trying to sleep away a headache, she says—kissing and crying over her dead lover's picture, I suppose," Cristine answered scornfully. "And, as for your ostrich policy, mother, what good do you hope to do by that ? Do you think that not naming him will make her forget ?"

"I trust she has forgotten," Mrs. Bruce said, with a pious horror of her daughter's reckless words. "In a few days it will be a sin for Lord de Gretton's wife to remember the dead in that wild, romantic fashion."

Still if it is right for some of the fashion-

be wrong for him. There is not one law for the pulpit and another for the pew.
If it is right for private Christians to do these things it is right for the preachers and pastors likewise. If it is wrong it is wrong all round. There are some dreadfully inconsistent folk. They are at a theatre two or three times a week, and yet if they saw the minister of their church there they would all but faint at the sight of such a holy man in such a locality. Why faint ? Why be scandalized ? To the pure all things are pure.
Yes, they say, but it really after all does not look the right thing for clergymen to go at such kind of work. Why ? The why just lies here that their consciences persistently tell them that all this does not look well in a man professing goodness. In fact that it is to him sin. Yes, yes. And if it is sin to him it is sin to you all the same, good friends.

Success in Business.

Success in business, as every merchant knows, is easier to talk about than attain. It is easier to put down expected profits on paper, than to put down the right kind of paper on the bank counter. There are principles and rules of action necessary on the part of the business man or success will not follow his efforts. It is essential for one who is launching into business to know the different points of the compass, and have a good chart before him, as for a pilot who has been entrusted with a valuable cargo. Those who are already on a voyage and have had, so far, fair winds cannot expect these will always last. To be successful if the storm should come, they must be prepared.

We do not propose in this article to draw out a mercantile chart. This is not the work of an hour, or a day. We try to furnish our readers the best one we can in the course of every year. But in the few lines we now write we can give two or three important hints which may be of service to some who have not very carefully thought of the matter before. They are drawn from practical experience.

An old merchant in the interior of this state, who lately retired with a fortune, said: "I always made a point during the time I was in business to keep a good stock of goods on hand of those goods that were in general demand, and marked the price at a small advance upon the cost price. On those goods in less demand my profits were a fraction more. I never mis-stated the quality of my goods—always representing them as they were. This gave my patrons confidence in me and they would as soon send their children for what they needed as to come themselves. I had to sell cheap; consequently had to purchase as low as possible. In doing this I always kept myself posted as to prices, which I found was only to be accomplished through some mercantile papers that were not controlled by large jobbing houses. I also inaugurated the the system of short credits and long friends; consequently when I closed up my business, my book accounts were few and in small amounts. If a man expects to be successful in business he must be honest—that is, give sixteen ounces to the pound; four quarts to the gallon; four full pecks to the bushel; and always post himself as to prices of goods."

After reading the above to another successful merchant he stated that it was his case also, and added, "To sell low you must buy low; to buy low you must if possible buy for cash, and know just how long your cash will purchase. To do this I always studied a reliable journal the same as a student does his text book. I made it, as your western friend says, 'a

MISCELLANEOUS.

The French are sending off reinforcements to Tonquin, and they will need to send more before all the play is played out.

The victory of the False Prophet in the Soudan will issue in all likelihood in the English permanently occupying Egypt. Why not? It is perhaps the best thing which could be done.

The reception tendered to the Greek orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem, at Constantinople, is regarded in Rome as a great loss to the Roman Catholics in the Holy Land. Patriarch Nicodeme is a Russian protege, and the Sultan, by granting him extraordinary honors, is supposed to indicate his willingness to favor Russia in Syria, in order to counteract French influence. France is the only nation that protects Roman Catholics there. Hence the fears of the latter.

The sphere ot woman s avocations is evidently extending. A woman in New Orleans last week applied to the United States Treasury Department for license to be captain of a sailing vessel, having satisfactorily passed the necessary examination. The law officers are now wrestling with the question whether or not, under the law, a woman can legally fill the position of captain. There can be no doubt that many a woman has very worthily fill the position of "Captain's mate."

The man who last week shot the policeman in Detroit, has been caught. Of course he had the usual excuse, being that he was drunk; and of course if the sapient ruling in the Toronto case is to be taken, he cannot be guilty of murder, for he could not have borne any malice. That sort of stuff whether from a murderer or a magistrate, becomes quite too monotonous; we had all better have a rest from it. The fact of having been drunk and carrying a revolver, ought to be taken as aggravations of the crime, and settle that the fellow is still more than otherwise deserving of death.

If it be true that the ulema of Mecca have pronounced El Mahdi an imposter, this condemnation will give him less trouble, in his hour of triumph, than it might have when struggling for recognition in the Soudan. The ulema are the learned men—learned in law and divinity, but not necessarily in military affairs. Although their special function is to see that the teachings of the Koran are rightly interpreted in reference to affairs of the day, the piratical followers of El Mahdi will be more likely to yield to the evidence in behalf of his pretensions furnished by successes in the field than to the denunciations of distant mollahs and muftis.

Study to please the person you expect will buy your goods; study the golden rules of square dealing; study system and study the price-lits of an independent mercantile paper.

Of course success will not always attend every effort made. The location you have selected may not be one where a satisfactory business can be done. But one thing may be depended on, viz: You can not put your goods helter skelter on your shelves and counters, and then sit down and expect the dollars to roll into your money drawer, any more than a farmer can expect, after putting in his seed potatoes, to sit in his parlor and let them grow. They will not do their own ploughing and hoeing, and when ripe they will not jump into the barrles and start for the market.—Ex.

Scotch Beauties.

They are a wiry and enduring rather than a muscularly massive race, though here and there the Scandinavian physique is found to prevail. In the island of Lewis it is odd to note how in the north, where the names of the villages and mountains have Norse terminations (bost and bahl), the population is of the stalwart, tall, fair-haired, Scandinavian type, while the smaller black-haired or red-haired Celt occupies the southern half of the island, in which the names of the streams and mountains and lakes are exclusively Celtic. The handsomest man I have ever seen was a boatman on the west of Skye, the calm and serious dignity of whose face seemed more suggestive of Leonardo da Vinci than of herring fishing; and the handsomest woman I have ever seen was a young married lady who, some years ago, happened to be travelling in the Clan man, and whose gently modulated English indicated an Inverness origin. When a Highland girl, even of the peasant class, is pretty (and the phenomenon is not a very rare occurrence), the prettiness is of a refined and intellectual type; the forehead high, the eyes clear, full, and contemplative, the mouth fine, and the expression of the face gentle and yet firm. Wordsworth never forgot the beauty of the Highland girl he saw at Inverspaid. Indeed, it is said he had to have pronounced El Mahdi an imposter, this condemnation will give him less trouble, in his hour of triumph, than it might have when struggling for recognition in the Soudan. The ulema are the learned men—learned in law and divinity, but not necessarily in military affairs. Although their special function is to see that the teachings of the Koran are rightly interpreted in reference to affairs of the day, the piratical followers of El Mahdi will be more likely to yield to the evidence in behalf of his pretensions furnished by successes in the field than to the denunciations of distant mollahs and muftis.

It would never do not to have plenty of sporting intelligence in the daily papers. At least according to some, that part of the paper is always the most popular and interesting. Even pretty staight laced people, who shake their heads at every thing even suspected of being naughty, take a sly look at the interdicted corner to see what fights are coming off, what they are doing in the way of pigeon shooting, and what is the horsiest and freshest news going. It has all just such a nice spice of wickedness about it that numbers who are tolerably conscientious can't help themselves. They do it all in secret and on the sly. But still they do it all the same.

Elephantine Sagacity.

Every one knows that the species of brute creation to which Jumbo belongs is exceptionally intelligent, and, were further proof of the fact required, it is furnished by the exploits of a couple of young elephants recently provided with a home at the St. Petersburg Zoological Gardens. The public admired and made prime favorites of them; they were fed with cakes and good things to such an extent by visitors to the gardens that their health greatly suffered, and it became necessary for their visitors to interfere. The public were requested to be less generous in their offerings, and, the request being not generally attended to, a notice to the same effect was painted on a metal plate and affixed above the entrance of their house. This failing to attain the object in view, and persons continuing to feed the elephants with pastry, an official was told off to call attention to the notice. The intelligent animals, observing that whenever the latter raised his hand to point to the metal plate, buns and cakes about to be given were withheld, drew their own conclusions and acted in their own interests. They set to work to demolish the notice which proved an obstacle to their enjoyment, and when their keeper looked in upon them one morning, he found it on the ground so knocked about and damaged that a new plate had to be procured, which to save it from destruction has been placed out of the animal's reach.

Scotch Beauties.

They are a wiry and enduring rather than a muscularly massive race, though here and there the Scandinavian physique is found to prevail. In the island of Lewis it is odd to note how in the north, where the names of the villages and mountains have Norse terminations (bost and bahl), the population is of the stalwart, tall, fair-haired, Scandinavian type, while the smaller black-haired or red-haired Celt occupies the southern half of the island, in which the names of the streams and mountains and lakes are exclusively Celtic. The handsomest man I have ever seen was a boatman on the west of Skye, the calm and serious dignity of whose face seemed more suggestive of Leonardo da Vinci than of herring fishing; and the handsomest woman I have ever seen was a young married lady who, some years ago, happened to be travelling in the Clan man, and whose gently modulated English indicated an Inverness origin. When a Highland girl, even of the peasant class, is pretty (and the phenomenon is not a very rare occurrence), the prettiness is of a refined and intellectual type; the forehead high, the eyes clear, full, and contemplative, the mouth fine, and the expression of the face gentle and yet firm. Wordsworth never forgot the beauty of the Highland girl he saw at Inversnaid. Indeed, it is said he had to recur to that fount of inspiration when he wished to pay a poetical compliment to his wife. For the rest, the way in which an educattd Highland young lady speaks English is one of the most delightful things in the world, though no doubt she would be very much surprised, and even indignant, if she were told she had any accent at all.—Harper's Magazine.

The good folks in Spain were very anxious to do the civil and kind thing to "Our Fritz," and so they got up a bull fight for his enjoyment. The Crown Prince is not a bad sort of fellow. Indeed, everybody says that he is not only not bad, but that in many respects he is very good. No wonder, then, that he was awfully shocked at the cruel, monstrous exhibition. He would have been less than a man if it had been otherwise. Will this have any influence in making the hideous amusement less popular among the Spaniards? It is to be hoped so, yet one can scarcely say. Still, for a guest, and one whose interests and intentions were to please, to be disgusted with their favorite exhibition, must have been pretty trying to their proud stomachs. Be it so. It is to be hoped that it will do them good.

An Emergency.

A few days ago a man with a meek and humble expression and wearing a summer suit of clothes applied to one of the railroad passenger agents for a dead-head to go to Toledo.

"Why do you want to go to Toledo?"

"To git married."

"And you haven't any money?"

"Not above twenty-five cents."

"Hadn't you better be worth your fare to Toledo before taking a wife on your hands to support?"

"You don't understand the case," protested the man. "I'm going to marry a widow worth at least $5,000, and the first thing I shall do will be to remit you the price of the ticket. I'm poor and the widow knows it, but she marries me for love."

He protested so long and earnestly that he was finally passed down the road. Two days elapsed and then a letter was received from him, saying:

"Heaven bless you for your kindness! Reached here all right, and married the widow according to programme. It turns out that she is'nt worth a copper. In this emergency may I ask you to pass us both to Detroit, where I have hopes of striking a job?"

The old-fashioned pointed girdles are again in vogue, and the handsomest of these are made of tinted satin for evening wear, and nearly covered with gay-colored embroideries of silk and chenille, or with a richly colored and heavy bead-work, made to resemble precious gems.

FARMER'S CORNER.

Cross-bred Fowl.

Crossing fowls enables us to combine the merits of different breeds. The Brahma has a very small comb, is heavily feathered, and grows to large size. By crossing this breed with the Leghorn, we reduce the comb of the latter, increase the size of the body, and afford heavier feathering. The crossed fowl will sit, though the propensity is not so strong as in the pure Brahma, and the good qualities of both breeds are blended. A cross of the Brown Leghorn and Partridge Cochin permits of uniformity of color, and makes a superb fowl for all purposes. The Houdan answers excellently for crossing on large coarse hens, the offspring usually being larger than either of the parents. When two non-setting breeds are crossed, such as Leghorns and Hamburgs, the result is sometimes persistent sitters. An excellent cross is to use a Langshan cockerel with large common hens, the pullets from which are mated with a Houdan cockerel. This gives a hardy, early maturing, large-bodied fowl, and if a Plymouth Rock cockerel be used the succeeding season, it will be an advantage. The Langshan is the earliest maturing of any of the Asiatics, but has hard legs, which are considered objectionable by some. For plumpness of body, yellow legs, and hardiness, the new breed—the Wyandotts (formerly American Sebrights) are equal to any. They are nearly as large in size as the Plymouth Rocks. A pure-blooded cockerel must always be mated with crossed pullets. If this is not done, the chicks hatched from the crossed stock will be of different colors, shapes, and sizes, as they usually revert to different ancestors. Sandy soil is best for the feathered-legged breeds. Plenty of room in the coups should always be allowed, without regard to the breed of fowl.—P. H. Jacobs, in American Agriculturist for Dec.

Hints on Hog Killing.

Skill and practice are needed to take out the intestines neatly, without cutting or breaking them and soiling the flesh. Run the knife lightly down, marking the belly straight, cut to the bone between the thighs, and in front of the ribs and below, and split the rear bones with an axe carefully, not to cut beyond them; open the abdomen by running the hand or two fingers behind the knife with its edge turned outward. Little use of the knife is required to loosen the entrails. The fingers, rightly used, will do most of the severing. Small strong strings, cut in proper lengths, should be always at hand to quickly tie the severed ends of any small intestines cut or broken by chance.

ed by freezing, may be covered. The sashes should not be put over the plants until there is danger of severe freezing weather. Other frames should be made ready for very early lettuce. The soil is to be spaded and enriched and made ready for planting, and the frames then filled up with leaves. If there are shutters at hand to cover them, all the better, Earth is often wanted for hot-beds, seed-boxes, etc., at a time when the ground is still frozen. Lay in a good supply of fine, rich soil, under a shed, or where it can be had when needed.—Dr. Thurber, in American Agriculturist for Dec.

What Ploughed Ground Pays Farmers.

Take one illustration of the magnitude of our agriculture. Omitting the pastoral interest, which exceeds any other one; also leave out garden and fruit products, root crops, rye, barley, peas, beans, in short everything except four leading crops grown on tilled ground, viz., corn, wheat, oats, and cotton. The total yield of these for the present and past four years aggregate, in round numbers, about eight hundred and twent-five million bushels of corn; twenty-three hundred million bushels each of wheat and oats, and thirty million bales of cotton. If we estimate the average money value to the actual producers on the farm, and for the crops sold and used by themselves, at seventy cents per bushel for wheat, thirty cents per bushel for corn and oats, and thirty-five dollars per bale for cotton, we have the soil yielding in these four ploughed crops alone, over five thousand seven hundred and thirty-two million dollars; or over eleven hundred and forty-six million dollars every year!—a sum so vast as to be beyond actual comprehension. All other pursuits sink into insignificence in comparison with that of the farmer.—American Agriculturist for December.

Progress in Ocean Navigation.

If this were not an age in which men had almost ceased to wonder, and had altogether ceased to wonder much and to wonder long, the swift development of our merchant steam marine of iron and steal might well be offered to the astonishment of mankind. A hundred years ago Henry Cort's great invention for rolling iron bars and plates had not been devised, and nothing in the shape of iron plates in which ships could be built existed. Even fifty years ago, although several canal boats and some coasting steamers had been constructed of iron, two or three of which had made sea voyages on their way to their destinations, the construction of iron ships for ocean navigation, if thought of and spoken of, had not yet commenced. But it is a matter of daily practice for the American and the Englishman to step on board a steam palace of steel, and sweep across the vast Small strong strings, cut in proper lengths, should be always at hand to quickly tie the severed ends of any small intestines cut or broken by chance. An expert will catch the entire offal in a large tin pan or wooden vessel, holding it between himself and the hog. Unskilled operators, and those opening very large hogs, need an assistant to hold this. The entrails, and then the liver, heart, etc., being all removed, thoroughly rinse out any blood or filth that may have escaped inside. Spread the cut edges apart by inserting a short stick between them to admit free circulation of cool air. When dripping is over, or the hanging posts are wanted for other carcasses, remove the dressed ones, and hang them in a cool cellar or other safe place until the whole flesh is thoroughly cooled through. Or if, for convenience and easier work, the carcasses are cut up before cooling, let all the pieces lie apart for at least half a day. Removing the lard from the long intestines requires experience that can only be learned by practice. The fingers do most of this cleaner, safer, and better than a knife. A light feed the night before killing leaves the intestines less distended and less likely to be broken.—J. M. Stahl, in American Agriculturist for December.

Take Care of Your Orchard Trees.

When the owner visits his young orchard after the snows have melted away in spring, he often makes the disheartening discovery that many of his trees have been girdled by mice or rabbits. Judging from our own correspondence, the damage by these animals must in the aggregate be very heavy.

The first thing to be done is to examine the extent of the injury. Frequently it is not so bad as it looks, and the inner bark is not entirely removed. If this covers even a fourth of the wounded portion, and connects the bark above the wound with that below it, the chances are that the wound will heal if drying can be prevented. The ordinary grafting wax, applied on old, worn cotton cloth, or on paper, as used in grafting, should be applied over the injured portion. But it is a matter of daily practice for the American and the Englishman to step on board a steam palace of steel, and sweep across the vast sea desert, that separates their shores, at the rate of twenty miles an hour. In eight days you pass from Pall Mall to Broadway. The City of Rome and the Alaska have steamed over the distance between Sandy Hook and Queenstown in 6 days and 22 hours. As a means of comparing the ocean speed with what has happened before the days of the iron hulls propelled by steam engines, it may be instructive and amusing to refer to a piece of evidence once given to a Committee of the House of Commons. The captain of a sailing troop transport stated that he was on one occasion lying windbound in the Downs, with troops for the West Indies, in company with another vessel similarly employed, and having the same destination. A slant of wind came of which the witness was just able to avail himself, and he got away down channel. After an ordinary outward voyage he exchanged troops, and made an ordinary voyage home again, many and many a long week elapsing, nevertheless, before he again cast anchor between the Forelands. But when he did so, he had his old companion again, for the slant of wind that sufficed for the one was insufficient for the other, and there she had lain "above her beef-bones" ever since. It is to the introduction of iron and steel into the ship-building that we owe the vast improvement in ocean speed. Neither the strength to resist the enormous strains of modern engines, equivalent to 10,000 horses, nor the length and fineness of of form required for the acceptance, so to speak, of high speeds, could have been obtained all the time wood was the sole ship-building material. With iron and steel as our material we may be a long way at present from a limit of speed and size. And yet the change in size has been very striking. We may give an instance which will illustrate this, and at the same time illustrate the growth of professional opinion on these questions. M. Deputy de Lome, afterward chief naval architect of the French navy under Napoleon III., made a professional visit to this country in 1842. He went to Bristol, and there

This, especially on quite small trees, will prevent all evaporation. Another application is the old grafting clay, made by thoroughly mixing and beating together stiff clay with half as much cow manure. Apply this over the wound quite thickly, and fasten it in place by wrapping with an old cloth and tying with strings. If the inner bark is completely gone, nothing remains but to bridge over the wound with cions, and thus restore the communication between the roots and the top. The cions may be taken from the same tree if they can be spared, or those another of the same kind will answers as well.—American Agriculturist for December.

Preparing for Spring in the Garden.

Wherever a crop is taken off, it will be a great gain to manure and plough or spade the land, leaving it rough during the winter. All such work as making paths, laying drains, etc., is more advantageously done now than when the press of spring work is at hand. If new frames are needed, or straw mats, or crates for marketing produce, or garden labels are required, if implements are to be made, repaired or bought—whatever can be done in the present months—will save much valuable time in spring. Now, and all through the winter, add everything to the manure pile that will decompose and increase its bulk and value. Among the preparations for spring is the pricking out into cold frames, the cabbage, cauliflower and lettuce plants from seeds. It is important to set the plants of cabbage and cauliflower down to the first leaf, so that the stem, the portion most readily injur-

The Great Britain was 274 feet in length; the City of Rome is 586 feet.

Triangles formed of many rows of soutache braid are newer than wheels of braid for ornamenting cloth dresses or cloaks.

The newest sealskin wrap is a short visite with high shoulders and long tab fronts but very short in the back. The trimming instead of being a band of fur from some other animal, is a ball fringe with the balls covered with sealskin.

White velvet marguerites, with crystal, pearl, or silver bead centres, are much used this season both for ornamenting opera bonnets and hats and for dress and corsage garniture. These are very often mingled with maiden-hair ferns, and white heather, but all members of the daisy tribe, both great and small, are in high favor.

It is, however, slightly changed this season, by being loose in front but tight-fitting at the back, with ample fullness to allow room for the dress skirt beneath. Figured cloths with Egyptian and Indian designs are used in odd colors of blue and brown, with shaded plush or silk linings.

The smallest children wear large wide-brimmed hats, which form a most becoming frame to the face. They are made of very soft and fine felt and are handsomely trimmed with velvet bands and full plumes. Dark colors are the fashion in these hats—pre-eminently dull red, blue and brown—and with these should be worn a cloth or plush coat of the same color long enough to hide the dress beneath it.

The man who lives in vain, lives worse than in vain. He who lives to no purpose, lives to a bad purpose.

Modern education too often covers the fingers with rings, and at the same time cuts the sinews at the wrists.

Never reason from what you do not know. If you do you will soon believe what is utterly against reason.

Virtue will catch as well as vice by contact; and the public stock of honest, manly principle will daily accumulate.

So quickly sometimes has the wheel turned round that many a man has lived to enjoy the benefit of that charity which his own piety projected.

Sincerity is an openness of heart; tis found in very few people, and that which we see commonly is not it, but a subtle dissimulation to gain the confidence of others.

Thinkers are as scarce as gold; but he whose thought embraces all his subject, who pursues it uninterruptedly and fearless of consequence, is a diamond of enormous size.

The talent of turning men into ridicule, and exposing to laughter those one converses with, is the qualification of little minds and ungenerous tempers. A young man with this cast of mind cuts himself off from all manner of improvement.

Men who are perpetually engaged in accumulating wealth without ever allowing themselves time to enjoy it, are like hungry folks who are always cooking without ever sitting down to dine.

Two Curious Needles.

The King of Prussia recently visited a needle manufactory in his kingdom in order to see what machinery, combined with the human hand, could produce. He was shown a number of superfine needles, thousands of which, together, did not weigh half an ounce, and marveled how such minute objects could be pierced with an eye. But he was to see that in this respect even something still finer and more perfect could be created. The borer—that is, the workman whose business it is to bore the eye in those needles—asked for a hair from the monarch's head. It was readily given and with a smile. He placed it at once under the boring machine, made a hole in it with the greatest care, furnished it with a thread, and then ly trimmed with velvet bands and full plumes. Dark colors are the fashion in these hats—pre-eminently dull red, blue and brown—and with these should be worn a cloth or plush coat of the same color long enough to hide the dress beneath it.

Warm cloths in heather-gray mixtures are fashionable for morning costumes for the streets, as they are quite suitable for mantles and jackets. Fancy cloths show close and intricate blendings of color which make them dull and harmonious in tone, and therefore suitable for the street. Fur plastrons and borders, with some bronze, gilt or silver braid, are the trimmings.

Blue cloth costumes are plainly made, but, gayly ornamented by rows innumerable of Veronese-red braid. The jockey basque opens over a puffed Moliere chemisette of red velvet but fastened down the centre with red silk buttons. The tunic is short in front, with still shorter Watteau folds behind. New combinations for similar dresses are brick red with moss green, slate gray and poppy colors, tobacco brown and electric blue.

Moderate Drinking.

The fact ought to be more generally known than it is that moderate drinking, never approaching drunkenness, is by no means so safe and so commendable as some well meaning men represent it to be. Sir Henry Thompson, one of the most honored physicians in England, has given a good deal of attention to this important question, and this is his deliberate verdict :—

"The habitual use of fermented liquors, to an extent far short of what is necessary to produce intoxication, injures the body and diminishes mental power." He further asserts, from his own long medical experience, that "the use of fermented liquors, taken in quantity which is conventionally deemed 'moderate' causes many of the painful and dangerous maladies of the body." When such results come from the moderate use of fermented liquors, what results may be expected from even the moderate use of the more intoxicating distilled liquors such as brandy and whiskey, so commonly used by moderate men in Canada?

Writing on the same subject the able editor of the Century Magazine says :—"The loss of self-respect the lowering of ambition, and the fading out of hope are signs of the progress from moderation to inebriety. . . Who does not know reputable gentlemen, physicians, artists, clergymen even, who were never drunk in their lives, and never will be, but who reveal, in conversation and in conduct, certain melancholy effects of the drinking habit? The brain is so often inflamed by alcohol that its functions are imperfectly performed ; and there is a perceptible loss of mental power, and of moral tone. The drinker is not conscious of this loss ; but those who know him best are painful-without ever sitting down to dine.

Two Curious Needles.

The King of Prussia recently visited a needle manufactory in his kingdom in order to see what machinery, combined with the human hand, could produce. He was shown a number of superfine needles, thousands of which, together, did not weigh half an ounce, and marveled how such minute objects could be pierced with an eye. But he was to see that in this respect even something still finer and more perfect could be created. The borer—that is, the workman whose business it is to bore the eye in those needles—asked for a hair from the monarch's head. It was readily given and with a smile. He placed it at once under the boring machine, made a hole in it with the greatest care, furnished it with a thread, and then handed the singular needle to the astonished king.

The second curious needle is in the possession of Queen Victoria. It was made at the celebrated needle manufactory at Bedditch, and represents the column of Trajan in miniature. This well-known Roman column is adorned with numerous scenes in sculpture, which immortalize Trajan's heroic actions in war. On this diminutive needle, scenes in the life of Queen Victoria are represented in relief, but so finely cut and so small, that it requires a magnifying glass to see them. The Victoria needle can, moreover, be opened ; it contains a number of needles of smaller size, which are equally adorned with scenes in relief.

The drinker is not conscious of this loss; but those who know him best are painfully aware that his perceptions are less keen, his judgments less sound, his temper less serene, his spiritual vision less clear, because he tarries every day a little too long at the wine."

A Sea of Corpses.

The following is an extract from a letter from one of the crew of the ship Samoa, posted at St. Helena:—

"When we reached Anjer what a sight met our eyes! Anger all gone; not one living soul left; the land on both sides white as snow, covered with ashes; trees all dead—a fearful sight. We were ordered to stop and heave to by a Dutch man-of-war. A small boat came to us and kindly took our letters. For two days after passing Anjer we ploughed through masses of dead bodies, hundreds and hundreds striking the ship on both sides; groups of fifty to a hundred all packed together, most of them naked, and such an odour? It was awful!

"We passed a great deal of wreckage, but of course we cannot tell if any vessels were lost. We also passed bedding, chests, and a number of white bodies, all dressed like sailors, with sheath knives on them. For ten days we went through fields of pumic stone. I have a quantity of it on board. We had a pleasant passage round the Cape of Good Hope; no gales; in fact, not wind enough. I hope you will see us home the first week in December."—N. Y. Herald.

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. Before these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

—Reeve Herring has for years been the recognized wit of the Council, but Coun. Lane is gradually supplanting him. At the meeting Monday evening he got off a good thing on Coun. Lowry. The members were indulging in some "chaff" over the tickets they should buy for the charity concert. Coun. Lowry suggested that Coun. Lane should buy reserved seat tickets and give them to those of the constituents whose votes he required and occupy a back seat himself. This caused the laugh on the senior West Warder, but it was quickly turned by the old gentleman saying, "Now, John, don't—me-ow-ow." The members were thrown into convulsions of laughter, and Coun. Lowry succumbed. The cat incident is destined to be a remarkable feature of the Councillor's public career.

—The London Advertiser is giving as a premium to its subscribers for 1884 a nicely gotten up volume entitled "The Advertiser Portrait Gallery," containing colored portraits of Queen Victoria, Mr. Gladstone, Lord Landsdowne, Hon. Edward Blake, Sir John Macdonald, Hon. Oliver Mowat, Alex. Mackenzie and President Arthur, with a short sketch of the life of each. It makes a handsome little volume, and will take. The portrait of Sir John is from a photograph by Mr. F. S. Richardson, of this town, and is the best ever taken of him.

A brakesman named J. A. Cliff had both his arms taken off about 1 o'clock this morning at the station. He was ascending the ladder of a car and fell off, both arms striking the rail. They were cut off just below the elbow. He is a young Englishman only three or four months out from the old country.

—Wax tapers for Christmas trees at W. D. Madden's.

The Leading Custom Mill.

Since recent improvements have been effected in Mr. J. A. Close's Mill in N. Fredericksburgh it is said to be by farmers the best three run custom mill in the county. The mill is purely a custom mill, and Mr. Close being abreast of the times has spared neither time nor expense to put it in shape for doing the best work. He has recently thoroughly overhauled the machinery, put in a larger purifier of an improved pattern, added improved bolts and a powerful engine, and is now in a better position to handle the inferior wheat of the season than any other custom mill in the county. This is the opinion, at least, of the large number of farmers who are seen going to and from the mill every day with their grists. Give him a trial and you will be convinced of the superiority of his work.

(Applause.) After some humorous remarks in regard to dinners in general, he said that on an occasion like this there was, perhaps, no subject more worthy of their consideration than university fellowship. (Applause.) The social aspect of a college life was a feature that did not receive all the attention it deserved; it was, in fact, most important, for without it college life would be very bare indeed and lose half its charm. (Applause.)" A large number of the leading men of Montreal were present, and the dinner was a great success. We congratulate Fulford on his preferment by his fellow students.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The regular meeting of the Town Council was held on Monday evening. It being near the end of the year every member was present. A petition was read from Mr. John Blewett and others, asking for a sewer on the north side of Dundas-st., from East-st. to Mr. C. F. Henderson's store, which was granted. A communication was read from Mr. John Carson, tendering his resignation as Chief Engineer of the Fire Brigade. In the discussion that arose it was discovered that Mr. Carson contemplates running for the Council. His resignation was accepted. Coun. Symington submitted pay list No. 21, amounting to $11.75, which was adopted. He also submitted the report of the Street Committee, which recommended no action on the account of Mr. J. Hearns; payment of the accounts of Ferguson Bros. and Mr. Wilder Joy; no action in the matter of the drain opposite Mrs. Bartells' residence till next spring. The Council considered the report clause by clause. The only recommendation to which objection was taken was that of Mr. Hearns' account, and after hearing the statements of Mr. Hearns and Coun. Symington the recommendation of the committee was accepted. The report passed without amendment. Coun. Aylsworth stated that there was no formal report from the Fire, Water and Gas Committee, but he reported verbally that the Committee had purchased through Downey & Co. five tons of the best Campbell coal for the engine and were arranging for new suction hose. On motion of Reeve Herring, seconded by Coun. Rose, the Clerk was instructed to prepare a by-law in accordance with the recommendation of the Council exempting the Glass Works from taxation, $30 was voted the Poor and Sanitary Committee. Coun. Aylsworth submitted a by-law providing for the holding of the municipal elections, which was passed as follows:—

East ward—At Mr. John Fennell's shop; Mr. John Fennell, returning officer.

Centre ward South division—At the town hall; Mr. S. R. Miller, returning officer. North division at the residence of Mrs. Mary Fraser; Mr. Silas Vrooman, returning officer.

West ward South division—At Mr. J. L. Martin's shop; Mr. Jas. McCay, returning officer. North division—At Mr. Ira Kimmerly's dwelling; Mr. Amos Kimmerly, returning officer.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid: J. Storms, bread for tramps, $2.20; W. M. O'Beirne, printing and advertising, $11.60; J. Baldwin, cutting wood, $1.50; Levi Kelly, impounding cattle two weeks, $6; Wm. Douglass, cutting wood, $1.50; J. J. Perry, pens, etc., $2.50; treasurer's vouchers, $110.81; Jas. Plumley, carting, 55c.; Fairbairn Co., plank for sidewalks, $1,111.76; Mr. Kirby, 6 pickets, $1.20. The account of J. Rooks, lighting lamps, was referred to the Clerk. The Council then adjourned.

"T. T." Besieged By Correspondents.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

DEAR SIR,—Having seen by your correspondence that "T. T." was still in the land of the living and that his political pulse beats the same as my own, and thinking that in all probability "Nellie Tilsit" ere this had found a companion for life and cared not to communicate with T.T., I thought I would write and try to be a balm for his wounded feelings when he finds out she can never be any more than a past remembrance to him.

I never had a beau, and as for being in love I can't say if I ever was or not, for I don't know what it is. I don't think it is the fault of the climate, as other girls seem to have beaux and get married around here, but I think I am destined to be an old maid. Sister says it is so nice for me to visit her, I am so handy darning baby's stockings and knitting for her.

So, Mr. Editor, you see they have not the faintest idea that I will ever be married. Do you wonder that I avail myself of the first opportunity to secure the affections of a young man

It was either murder or suicide....This morning Joseph Poole was hanged at Dublin for the murder of John Kenny. A large crowd assembled to witness the execution. Men uttered prayers and women fell upon their knees....A Nottawa farmer named Malcolm Duffey, was killed yesterday by his team running away....The strike on the Canadian Pacific Railway has come to an end....Ralph Patterson, while crossing Loborough Lake, with a team, broke through the ice. The horses were drowned and a quantity of provisions lost. Patterson had a narrow escape from being drowned....The directors of the Belleville Mechanics' Institute are adding $400 worth of new books to their new institute....A Hallelujah wedding between two captains of the Salvation Army, at Belleville, is expected to take place shortly.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 19.—Daniel McIntyre was charged with arson at Kingston yesterday....David Hobbs, Kingston, to-day attempted to shoot Mr. Mead, his employer, for discharging him....A man named Gillmore of Sandwich, Ont., this morning failed to smuggle American kerosene oil into Canada by the boat sticking in the ice off a point below Sandwich. Municipal Whisperings.

—There is likely to be a keen fight in Ernesttown. Mr. John Sharp, who has for years most efficiently served the township as Councillor and Deputy-Reeve, is a candidate for the Reeveship. It is generally conceded that he deserves promotion, and the ratepayers will no doubt place him in the office he seeks. He will be opposed by ex-Reeve Aylsworth. Mr. P. E. R. Miller and Mr. B. Davis will contest the first Deputy Reeveship; Mr John Johnston and Mr. G. A. Parrott the second. The candidates for councillors are Messrs. B L. Aylsworth, James Lewis and Lewis Stover.

—A correspondent says:—The excitement on the Island is working up to fever heat. Every plan is being thought of to defeat the Capt. for the Reeveship. Every voter has been canvassed, and the friends of his opponent will claim a majority of at least seven votes. So far so good. The Capt. is not at all discouraged yet, and will stand the election and see the result of the ballot. A late rumor is that the opposing party are somewhat frightened and purpose bringing out a third man to split the Captain's vote. Your correspondent cannot believe this, as no gentleman would stoop to so small a thing as this, but fight it out on a square basis.

MRS. ELIZABETH MASON—Dr. M. Souvielle & Co.: Gentlemen—Yours of last week to hand, and in reply to your enquiry I have much pleasure in stating that from the first time of using the spirometer and the medicine I have improved very much. The bronchitis has entirely left me. I sleep well and have a good appetite. I must also add, that coming to you as I did as a last resort, the cure effected has been wonderful. Gratefully yours, MRS. "T. T." Besieged By Correspondents.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

DEAR SIR,—Having seen by your correspondence that "T. T." was still in the land of the living and that his political pulse beats the same as my own, and thinking that in all probability "Nellie Tilsit" ere this had found a companion for life and cared not to communicate with T. T., I thought I would write and try to be a balm for his wounded feelings when he finds out she can never be any more than a past remembrance to him.

I never had a beau, and as for being in love I can't say if I ever was or not, for I don't know what it is. I don't think it is the fault of the climate, as other girls seem to have beaux and get married around here, but I think I am destined to be an old maid. Sister says it is so nice for me to visit her, I am so handy darning baby's stockings and knitting for her.

So, Mr. Editor, you see they have not the faintest idea that I will ever be married. Do you wonder that I avail myself of the first opportunity to secure the affections of a young man if it be only through a newspaper correspondence? I would not start a correspondence with T. T. if I thought he would not appreciate my letter; but by reading this I think that he would sooner be in love than not, and does not agree with the poet who writes:—

Were you ever in love, my boys?
Did you ever feel the pain?
I would rather be in gaol, my boys,
Than be in love again.

ADOLPHUSTOWN GIRL.

MR. EDITOR.—I noticed a letter in your paper from "T. T." wishing for a correspondence with "Nellie Tilsit." Well, I am not Nellie, but I thought that perhaps T. T. would like to get acquainted with me. I am tall and angular, but good looking, with brown curly hair, pearly teeth, and Roman nose. Aunt Mary Ann says I am the best looking one in the whole tribe of Yawcubs, and she knows. I wouldn't mind trading pictures with T. T., only I have seen him once or twice and I know Aunt Mary Ann wouldn't let me put it in the album. (I live with Aunt Mary Ann.) Wishing T. T. a merry Xmas and happy New Year,

I remain, yours gratefully,
SARAHY ANN YAWCUB.

Be Careful What You Eat.

The best medical authorities declare that worms in the human system are often induced by eating too freely of uncooked fruit and too much meat, cheese, etc. Whatever may be the cause, Freeman's Worm Powders are speedy and safe to cure; they destroy the worms and contain their own cathartic, to expel them.

Municipal Whisperings.

—There is likely to be a keen fight in Ernesttown. Mr. John Sharp, who has for years most efficiently served the township as Councillor and Deputy-Reeve, is a candidate for the Reeveship. It is generally conceded that he deserves promotion, and the ratepayers will no doubt place him in the office he seeks. He will be opposed by ex-Reeve Aylsworth. Mr. P. E. R. Miller and Mr. B. Davis will contest the first Deputy Reeveship; Mr John Johnston and Mr. G. A. Parrott the second. The candidates for councillors are Messrs. B L. Aylsworth, James Lewis and Lewis Stover.

—A correspondent says:—The excitement on the Island is working up to fever heat. Every plan is being thought of to defeat the Capt. for the Reeveship. Every voter has been canvassed, and the friends of his opponent will claim a majority of at least seven votes. So far so good. The Capt. is not at all discouraged yet, and will stand the election and see the result of the ballot. A late rumor is that the opposing party are somewhat frightened and purpose bringing out a third man to split the Captain's vote. Your correspondent cannot believe this, as no gentleman would stoop to so small a thing as this, but fight it out on a square basis.

MRS. ELIZABETH MASON—Dr. M. Souvielle & Co.: Gentlemen—Yours of last week to hand, and in reply to your enquiry I have much pleasure in stating that from the first time of using the spirometer and the medicine I have improved very much. The bronchitis has entirely left me. I sleep well and have a good appetite. I must also add, that coming to you as I did as a last resort, the cure effected has been wonderful. Gratefully yours, MRS. E. MASON, Mothers! Mothers!! Mothers!!!

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it, who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother, and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Sold everywhere 25 cents a bottle. 41

—James Brayley, Hamilton, says: "I read the testimonials for McGregor's Speedy Cure and found that I had not to go to New York, Philadelphia, Louisiana or Texas to find living witnesses of its value, we had plenty of persons right here to prove its merits. I got a bottle and it helped me right away. I was as bad with Bilious Fever and Indigestion as I think any one could be. I have taken three bottles and am nearly well and can eat any kind of food without it hurting me. I may say that I am better than I ever expected to be." Free trial bottles at T. A. Huffman's and A. A meeting was afterwards organized and the various candidates aired their views of municipal matters. The attendance of electors was not large. Mayor James was first called on and gave a satisfactory account of his stewardship. Mr. Joy then laid his case before the people.

Mr. J. Aylsworth, one of the candidates for the Reeveship, was next called upon. He referred to his ten years' service in the council and considered he was entitled to promotion. His record as councillor was the only guarantee he had to offer for his courre in the higher office, if elected. He trusted the ratepayers who had reposed confidence in him in the past would not withhold it now. He was at the close greeted with loud applause.

Mr. Uriah Wilson was the next speaker. He produced a book of figures compiled from the annual reports of the County Council, and proceeded to give the electors an insight into the financial standing of the county. The reading of these enabled Mr. Wilson to spin out his speech to a respectable length and make it quite formidable. But as the same figures are printed every year at an expense of about $200 to the county, and any elector can obtain a copy from the Clerk free of cost, it would be waste of space to reproduce them. After he had dispensed this fund of cheap knowledge, and made some reference to what he considered was mismanagement on the part of the town council in not paying the $2,000 debenture due in 1883, he indulged in a little egotistical bluster. He considered that matters of unusual importance would arise in the county council next year, and it was necessary to have "some fellow there who has had experience and could treat the members well and get all he could for the town." He gave the people to understand pretty distinctly that "the fellow" who could do this up to the handle was himself. Mr. Aylsworth had no such personal magnetism in his composition as he had. He considered that Mr. Aylsworth should learn to creep before he began to walk, and should aspire only to the Deputy-Reeveship. After some further remarks of a general character he took his seat.

Mr. Aylsworth asked Mr. Wilson if it was presumption on his (Mr. A.'s) part to aspire to the Reeveship, was it not presumption in Mr. Wilson to step into the Warden's chair over Mr. Herring, who had been Reeve for years. (Applause.)

Mr. Wilson with becoming modesty explained that he was selected Warden because he was better fitted for the office than Mr. Herring.

Mr. T. G. Carscallen on coming forward complained that Mr. Wilson had taken all the wind out of his sails by taking the figures out of his book, which elicited loud

THE BLOOMFIELD MURDER.

Tracing the Tracks of the Suspected Murderers in the Snow.

PICTON, Dec. 29.—The preliminery investigation in the Bloomfield murder case was resumed this morning at 9 o'clock, in the Court House, before Police Magistrate Curry and the two other magistrates associated with him, yesterday. The evidence to-day was chiefly respecting the tracks. It will be remembered that a light snow had fallen early on the evening of the night on which the murder was committed, which, while it covered all the old tracks enabled the fresh tracks to be plainly seen. tree of cost, it would be waste of space to reproduce them. After he had dispensed this fund of cheap knowledge, and made some reference to what he considered was mismanagement on the part of the town council in not paying the $2,000 debenture due in 1883, he indulged in a little egotistical bluster. He considered that matters of unusual importance would arise in the county council next year, and it was necessary to have "some fellow there who has had experience and could treat the members well and get all he could for the town." He gave the people to understand pretty distinctly that "the fellow" who could do this up to the handle was himself. Mr. Aylsworth had no such personal magnetism in his composition as he had. He considered that Mr. Aylsworth should learn to creep before he began to walk, and should aspire only to the Deputy-Reeveship. After some further remarks of a general character he took his seat.

Mr. Aylsworth asked Mr. Wilson if it was presumption on his (Mr. A.'s) part to aspire to the Reeveship, was it not presumption in Mr. Wilson to step into the Warden's chair over Mr. Herring, who had been Reeve for years. (Applause.)

Mr. Wilson with becoming modesty explained that he was selected Warden because he was better fitted for the office than Mr. Herring.

Mr. T. G. Carscallen on coming forward complained that Mr. Wilson had taken all the wind out of his sails by taking the figures out of his book, which elicited loud laughter. The speaker seeing the "bull" he had made, qualified the remark by saying that the figures were the same as he had intended using. [The figures were in Mr. Roe's handwriting and were no doubt intended for both.] He claimed credit for having improved the appearance of the county buildings and grounds, and for having been a regular attendant of the council. He had missed only one night in seven years. He hoped all would come out and vote for him. (Applause.)

Mr. John Cliff on coming forward stated that he was a candidate at the request of many ratepayers. Though late in the field he did not think his chances of election hopeless. He pointed to his five years' service in the town council, during which time he was chairman of the Streets and Bridges Committee, and said if elected he would, as in the past, do his duty fearlessly. He was loudly applauded.

Reeve Herring was next called upon and was received with applause. He had served the town in one capacity or another for twenty-four years—had grown grey in its service, as it were—and now wished to retire. He had never allowed politics to influence him in municipal matters and had always tried to do his duty up and above board. He hoped his successor would do likewise. Referring to the Wardenship he said he now knew why it was that Mr. Wilson had been selected over him. Mr. Wilson had said he had "treated" the councillors well. This explained the whole matter. He (Mr. H.) being a consistent temperance man, had done no treating. If it was necessary to perambulate the streets at night and treat in the hotels in order to get the Wardenship he did not want it. The speaker

THE BLOOMFIELD MURDER.

Tracing the Tracks of the Suspected Murderers in the Snow.

PICTON, Dec. 29.—The preliminery investigation in the Bloomfield murder case was resumed this morning at 9 o'clock, in the Court House, before Police Magistrate Curry and the two other magistrates associated with him, yesterday. The evidence to-day was chiefly respecting the tracks. It will be remembered that a light snow had fallen early on the evening of the night on which the murder was committed, which, while it covered all the old tracks enabled the fresh tracks to be plainly seen. The

were distinctly traced from Mr. Jones' door to the main road running in front of the house. They then followed the road west for a few rods and then took a southerly direction across the fields to West Lake. When on the ice they separated, one going in a southerly direction. These tracks led directly to Thompsett's door, and his boots fit the tracks. The other tracks led in an easterly direction to Louder's house. These tracks were made by boots having half-soles, and the half-sole of one boot was about a quarter of an inch longer than the half-sole of the other boot. These boots belong to George Louder and were found in his father's house. The the youngest man arrested, is not so strong. Mr. Low, Q. C., on behalf of the Crown, asked for an adjournment of the investigation until Friday, Jan. 4. The prisoners were remanded till that time. The court room, as on the previous day, was crowded, and public interest in the trial is increasing.

TEA MEETING.—A very successful tea meeting under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society was held in the C. M. Church here on Christmas evening. The customary repast over, D. W. Allison, Esq., M. P., was called to the chair. After an excellent address by the chairman, an interesting musical and literary programme was gone through, the singing of Miss Huff and Mr. Allen Davis and the recitation by Rev. E. I. Inwood receiving hearty applause. The chief object, however, of the meeting was to raise funds for a new church. It has long been felt that the Methodist friends have needed a new place of worship, and efforts have been made for several years to raise money for that purpose. It was determined this year, if possible, to bring the matter to a definite issue. The meeting was unanimously in favor of a new church being built during the ensuing summer, and that a subscription list for that purpose be opened at once. Rev. M. L. Pearson kindly took this matter in hand, and so successful was he that before the meeting closed the sum of $2,645 was subscribed, in sums ranging from $10 to $500, which sum was subscribed by our worthy chairman

Though the school was not opened till late in the season yet it reached the number of 76 attendants, and an average over 60. The public school under his control also flourished and was another evidence of his ability and willingness to sacrifice earthly pleasure and recreation for the public good. Oh that this Canada of ours were filled with such noble young men, whose heart was dedicated to God and whose life was devoted in trying to mould the character of the young for God and religion, then would religion "Blossom as the rose and morality flourish as the green bay tree." He lived in the affections of the people irrespective of denomination and will be sadly missed by both pastor and people. Owing to declining health he was obliged to cancel his engagement for the year 1884, a circumstance deeply regretted by all. On the eve of his departure a few of his many friends with the Rev. Mr. Deprau gave him a surprise in the shape of a farewell at his boarding house Mrs. Ham's residence. After the compliments of the evening were passed Rev. Mr. Duprau drew from his pocket a parcel and in an able address, expressive of the high esteem in which he was held by all and of the appreciation of his valuable services (gratuitously given) in the school, presented Mr. Sprowl (on behalf of his many friends) with a beautiful roll gold watch guard, a beautiful gold locket and a solid gold breast-pin. The present and presentation was a fitting tribute to appreciated worth Mr. Sprowls' reply showed clearly that the surprise was too great for his emotions, but it was very suitable—"disowned the right to reward in the discharge of moral duty." When all were seated the greatest surprise of all was given. Mr. Thos. Close who had taken a back seat now advanced and placed a parcel on the table before Mr. Sprowl, who proceeded to open it and lo! a beautiful silver cake basket was exposed to view, which he presented with a suitable address to the rev. gentleman and his lady, which was duly acknowledged in a feeling reply. The ceremony being ended all proceeded to their homes each one carrying with him memories long to be cherished in their hearts The feelings thus engendered between all concerned present and absent will ever be a source of pleasure to them. May success crown the efforts of our pastor and teacher all through subsequent life is the heartfelt wish of their friends in this locality.

THE REEVESHIP.—Dr. Kennedy is again in the field for election to the above-named office. —I have not noticed Roblin represented regularly in your valuable paper and this I consider a burning shame, especially when I see such able correspondents sending notes to the smaller papers of your town. —Although the fact is not generally known, Roblin is a great place, and number among its inhabitants some very noted persons. This latter fact was obvious to the most casual observer who attended the Xmas tree entertainment here.

—There was an oyster supper in the M. E. Church here on Tuesday night of last week. P. W. Dafoe, Esq., Reeve of Richmond, filled the chair with his usual ability. The oysters, the principal feature, were excellent. The programme was not so good, although Mr. Nixon's reading, "Pat's introduction to Master Bruin," was a very superior piece. Rev. Mr. Ferguson gave an admirable address, but as Grand Curiosity was present we refer you to his correspondence for a summary.

—The electors of this school section made, we think, a good choice when they elected Mr. Nixon as school truetee for the coming three years. Miss Detlor will probably be re-engaged as teacher for 1884. We think the trustees made a mistake in leaving the engagement of a teacher till after the annual school meeting. They may, as in this case, get a good teacher, but the good teachers are usually engaged before that time.

—Rev. Inwood was unable, owing to illness, to fulfill his appointment here on Sunday evening. We trust he may be speedily restored to his usual health. In the absence of Rev. Inwood, Mr. Denison led a prayer-meeting.

—Mr. George McBride, late teacher at Davis' Corners, started on Monday last for Brighton, where he will spend the winter taking orders for fruit and ornamental shade trees. We wish him success.

—Mr. Brenan, of Tyendinaga, started on Monday last for a short trip to the west. "As we journey through life let us live by tht way."

—Woods Bros' are rushing the shingle business these days. On Saturday they cut 17 m. They make an A No 1 article.

—Municipal politics don't seem to excite the natives of Roblin to anything like the average state. Since our popular Reeve has signified his intentions of retiring from the field we have little to gain, no matter which of the rival candidates is successful. Some persons are trying to introduce politics into the election. It is to be hoped that the intelligent electors of Richmond will see the folly of this and put their foot down on it at once.

THE REEVESHIP.—Dr. Kennedy is again in the field for election to the above-named office. He has served the municipality of Bath with great ability during the past five years as Reeve, his deliberations in the County Council have stamped him as a man of good executive ability and he has a host of friends on both sides of politics. His re-election is certain, notwithstanding the efforts being put forth by a few fossil Tories for his defeat. The electors of Bath are not the men to discard a gentleman of Dr. Kennedy's ability, especially when no charge of corruption or mismanagement have even been so much as mooted against him. He is without doubt the very best representative we could possibly get, and as he has served us faithfully in the past, and is now in a fair way of being rewarded for his services by being made Warden of the county, it would be an everlasting disgrace on our people to permit any man to supplant him at this particular time. We hope our people will look at this matter in its true light, and go to the polls on Monday and give the worthy doctor a "plumper." We have nothing much to say about his opponent, Mr. D. W. Ball. He is a very decent fellow for a small tea party, but would be at sea without a rudder, as a representative of a municipality.

[From another Correspondent.]

THE THEATRE ROWLAND.—For the general information of theatre going people we wish you to publish that the village of Bath is becoming renowned. The Conservative party here is determined not to be beaten in our municipal election, and have resolved, after failing in all their corrupt practices to accomplish their ends, to establish a theater, and prepare by practice to meet their opponents. Feeling somewhat doubtful as to their array of talent, and before erecting a suitable building for the purpose, they have concluded to hold meetings for rehearsal every evening in the store belonging to one of the principal managers. Rip Van Finkle will be the first play on the board. So far as regards the rehearsal the company is "doing splendid" and bids fair to end in success. We witnessed that part when Old engagement of a teacher till after the annual school meeting. They may, as in this case, get a good teacher, but the good teachers are usually engaged before that time.

Some persons are trying to introduce politics into the election. It is to be hoped that the intelligent electors of Richmond will see the folly of this and put their foot down on it at once.

—On Sunday last, after a long battle with that fell destroyer, consumption, death relieved John McCutcheon, aged 26 years, from all his troubles. The deceased was a young man of irreproachable moral character, and we have many reasons to believe this New Year to him is the happiest he ever experienced. Some three years ago Mr. McCutcheon, accompanied by his friend Arthur Kimmet, who has also gone to his reward, went to Colorado, in the hope that a change of climate would check the ravages of the desease, but it was too late and he returned home some time ago to die. Rev. Ferguson of Selby, preached a very eloquent and instructive address from the text, "So teach us to number our days."

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your space, and wishing you a very happy New Year,

"Lost the cough I long did know
Many years I felt its blow,
Without the use of pills or blister,
I cured the same with Down's Elixir.

Coughs and colds and hooping cough
By its power soon are off." 84.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who have ever used it, who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother, and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Sold everywhere 25 cents a bottle. 71

NOTICE TO THE

Farmers of Lennox & Addington.

The Directors of the Co-operative Warehousing Co. of Napanee,

Having chosen me as their Manager, I would say to all whom it may concern, that the storage of grain can be obtained on as favorable terms as heretofore, or there will be a purchaser of grain, Mr. A. N. Diamond, who has formerly proved himself one of the most liberal and satisfactory buyers that we have ever had dealings with (or other buyers if they wish to avail themselves of the opportunity.) Having obtained the services of Mr. Diamond as an experienced salesman at a moderate commission, farmers can have their grain shipped and sold to the Company, any Bank or other responsible person whom they may choose whereby they can obtain the advantage of the prices of the best markets with the least possible cost of charges, and there will be no more moving of stored grain into neighboring storehouses, contrary to your expectations and wishes and contrary to any understanding ever made with the Company or the late Manager that I ever heard of. Of his determined motives and objects I leave you to form your own opinion.

Christianity and Costly Raiment.

In Japan, some learned Professor tells us, the rich send their children to school in inferior garments in order that the poor may not be ashamed to come in their shabby clothes. The rich of Christendom would do a very considerate thing to make note of the fact. We would be very, very glad to see this rule observed in Canada in regard to our Sunday Schools. Many a child is sent to church on Sunday so arrayed in silks, and furs, and feathers, and jewelry trinkets, that Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of them ; many a poor child does not go to the same Sunday School at all, or very seldom, simply because he or she would look too plain and too common side by side with those of the gorgeous apparel. Many an earnest Sunday School teacher would find, if the honest truth could be laid bare, that much of her labor in trying to procure the attendance of certain children is neutralized by this very cause. How many of the great moral advantages sought to be conferred are thus destroyed possibly the world will never know. Many a child of struggling parents is too spirited to tell that the honest cause of absence is the old hat or the much worn dress, and the mischief goes on unsuspected. Possibly hundreds of parents are thoughtless in this matter. If we can but succeed in opening their eyes we have not labored in vain.

May not a word in regard to costly array be in season in regard to children of all ages ? It is not merely the young Miss who trips to the Sunday School in such fine feathers who excites the envy or rouses the spirit of her companions ; the great Lady who sweeps up the aisles in the very height of fashion is generally a much greater sinner in this respect. She may sweep a good many more less opulent sisters down the aisle, not to return frequently again, than she in her heart is aware of. Surely our churches are not the places for millinery displays ! It would be a grand thing if the custom could at once become general for every man and woman to go to church plainly clad. Some who go now would probably then stay, but a good many others whose faces are seldom seen there now could go much the oftener. One of the most honored and intelligent Christian women the writer has any remembrance of always made it a rule to go to the house of worship so plainly clad that her poor neighbors did not feel embarrassed to go in company. That lady was wise as well as rich, Our ministers might do a good thing for the cause in which they labor to set apart a "Temperance-in-dress Sunday."

AMONG THE INEBRIATES.

Life in an Establishment for the Cure of the Alcohol and Opium Habits.

Close to the shore of the bay at Fort Hamilton is a large cheerful-looking building that attracts the attention of most persons coming in by the ocean steamer. It is the Inebriates' Home. The system of cure practised by Dr. Blanchard, the superintendent, was commended yesterday by a well-known New York artist who had just been discharged as cured.

"I was taken up there," he said, "greatly against my will, and more closely resembling a lunatic than a man on an ordinary spree. I was allowed to get over my drunkenness, and then found that the place was more like a hotel than an asylum. The prices paid by the inmates range from $5 to $50 week, and some, under peculiar circumstances, are treated for nothing. Of course the accommodations vary with the price paid, but the treatment of each inmate is in accordance with the condition of the subject. You would be amazed if I should tell you the names of some of the persons who are there now. Lawyers, doctors, merchants, artists, and literary men greet each other periodically, and regret that they cannot enliven the occasion with a social glass. Liquor is not altogether denied, however, and every man, while he needs it, gets a dram of whiskey and lime water atstated hours.

"There are several clergymen of various denominations in the Home, and their craving for liquor is as great as that of any one. When a man first goes in nothing drinkable except water is ordinarily left within in his reach. Alcohol, bay rum, cologne, Florida water, anything that will burn his throat is acceptable to him. His razors, and pocket knife, and anything with which he might injure himself are removed. Opium eaters and men who have been treating themselves to hypodermic injections—and the name of the latter class is legion—are at once deprived of opium, and their sufferings are severe. It often takes six months before they get permanent relief.

"At meal hours colored waiters bring around bills of fare, and the guests are asked to make their selection. Many of them have not much appetite, and it is a well-worn joke to hand back the bill of fare and ask for a wine list. Despite all efforts to prevent them, some of the inmates occasionally get out and come back very drunk. For the first week they are watched day and night, but after that the vigilance is somewhat relaxed, and those who are foolish enough to do so sometimes escape."

The Highland Congregation Committee of Chicago have requested of the Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Collingwood, Ont., that Montreal's Black Sheep.

Montreal appears to have had more than its share of speculating bank officials during the last few years, or more than its share of them have been found out. It is simply astonishing to read, from week to week, the accounts of the developments of new commercial scandals from Montreal. False balance sheets have been attested to, fraudulent accounts have been published, and hundreds of thousands of dollars of the bank funds have been used in personal speculations by the men placed to guard the trusts. The mischief does not seem confined, by any means, to one set of officers or to one bank. To give a detailed account of all, or nearly all, these "irregularities" during the past year or two would require a good deal of space, and a good deal of taxing the memory. What is the matter? Have the men placed in such trustworthy positions been a much less honorable class of men than formerly, or has there been a more efficient system of examination introduced, so that it has become nearly impossible to escape detection? We do not undertake to answer these enquiries. On the face of it the evidence is plain, however, that "something must be done," or confidence in banks or bank officials will soon become entirely destroyed. Nearly all the mischief, so far as it has recently been laid bare, appears to be in the speculative turn of mind of the officials, and their greed for gain, faster than it can be honestly obtained by the legitimate use of their own property.

College Statistics.

Some one in the United States has been taking a good deal of pains to ascertain the professional destination of the alumni of fifty-eight colleges during the last half century. There were 38,054 in all, and in these 3,577 turned out doctors, and another 6,105 lawyers, while 9,991 were clergyman. According to the above reckoning the preachers were in a majority over the lawyers and doctors put together, and there seems to be an eternal fitness about some such arrangement, for fully so large a number of ministers as that would be required to pull the other two classes safely through, as things have gone———in the United States.

Can any one tell us how figures stand in regard to the alumni of the colleges in Canada? We do not know; but it is evident that the number of lawyers and doctors turned loose on society at the end of each collegiate year is something dread-

The Highland Congregation Committee of Chicago have requested of the Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Collingwood, Ont., that he accept an invitation from that body to repair to Chicago for the purpose of establishing a Gaelic congregation there.

John G. Saxe, the humorous poet, is growing gradually weaker at his home in Brooklyn. He suffers from cerebro spinal meningitis, complicated with partial paralysis induced by being buried under a railroad train in an accident on the Pan Handle road years ago. a more efficient system of examination introduced, so that it has become nearly impossible to escape detection? We do not undertake to answer these enquiries. On the face of it the evidence is plain, however, that "something must be done," or confidence in banks or bank officials will soon become entirely destroyed. Nearly all the mischief, so far as it has recently been laid bare, appears to be in the speculative turn of mind of the officials, and their greed for gain, faster than it can be honestly obtained by the legitimate use of their own property.

College Statistics.

Some one in the United States has been taking a good deal of pains to ascertain the professional destination of the alumni of fifty-eight colleges during the last half century. There were 38,054 in all, and in these 3,577 turned out doctors, and another 6,105 lawyers, while 9,991 were clergyman. According to the above reckoning the preachers were in a majority over the lawyers and doctors put together, and there seems to be an eternal fitness about some such arrangement, for fully so large a number of ministers as that would be required to pull the other two classes safely through, as things have gone———in the United States.

Can any one tell us how figures stand in regard to the alumni of the colleges in Canada? We do not know; but it is evident that the number of lawyers and doctors turned loose on society at the end of each collegiate year is something dreadful.

Election Cakes.

The plan of election cakes and other such money grabbing schemes in aid of church funds ought to be frowned down by every friend of Christianity in the land. Such things have been so often demoralizing and disgraceful that the only wonder is they have been so long tolerated. Surely our churches need not be so hard pressed for the necessary funds to carry on the holy work in which they are engaged as to stoop to schemes of a disturbing and demoralizing tendency. A report comes from Kingston that at a recent "election" of this character to raise funds in aid of St. Paul's church the political excitement ran so high that something near akin to a free fight was indulged in, with all the accompaniments of language more forcible than orthodox. The Minister, who evidently gave encouragement to the "rivalry" during the time the tickets were being sold, found himself unable to at last reap the whirlwind and stood aghast when he evidently ought to have been bringing in the police. If reaching this climax in Kingston will have the tendency to stop such schemes elsewhere, all will rejoice that it all happened.

Plain Truths!

The blood is the foundation of life, it circulates through every part of the body and unless it is pure and rich, good health is impossible, if disease has entered the system the only sure and quick way to drive it out is to purify and enrich the blood.

These simple facts are well known and the highest medidical authorities agree that nothing but iron will restore the blood to its natural condition; and also that all the Iron preparations hitherto made blacken the teeth, cause headache, and are otherwise injurious.

SULPHUR AND IRON BITTERS will thoroughly and quickly assimulate with the blood, purifying and strengthening it and thus drive disease from any part of the system, and it will not blacken the teeth cause headache or constipation and is positively not injurious.

St. Johnsbury, Vermont Oct. 31st 1882.

For six years I have been a great sufferer from blood disease, dyspepsia and constipation, and became so debilitated that I could not retain anything on my stomach, in fact life had almost become a burden, and when hope had almost left me, I was induced to give SULPHUR AND IRON BITTERS a trial I am now taking the third bottle and have not felt so well in six years as I do at present.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. My Dear Sirs,—Having tried your Fountain of Health for my complaints, I heartily urge all those suffering from Dizziness, Costiveness or Depression of Spirits, to give it a trial, as I have been completely cured with two bottles. Gentlemen,—I am forty years of age, and have been afflicted for the past ten years with Catarrh. I was recommended to try your Fountain of Health, which I am still using, and, although not perfectly cured, I am so much improved that I heartily recommend it any one suffering from the same disease. While taking it for the above disease, a severe pain, which I had in my side, has entirely left me.

Kidney Disease.

Dear Sirs,—I take pleasure in testifying to the benefis I have received from the use of your Fountain of Health. For over nine years I have suffered from disease of the Kidneys, having a severe pain in the back a great deal of the time and a tenderness of the eye balls. No remedies that I have ever tried, and I have used no end of them, gave me relief, except your Fountain of Health, which has made me feel good. I have used two of your dollar bottles.

Yours sincerely,

AMANDA FLUCH'S MURDERER.

First Knocked Down and Then Carried to a Tree and Hanged.

The Grand Jury of Middlesex county, New Jersey, in session at New Brunswick recently, presented an indictment for murder against John Koop, the self-confessed murderer of Amanda Fluch of Quakertown, Pa., otherwise known as Fannie Duhnam. Koop's confession to Chief of Police Fourat and the Philadelphia detectives included many details of the crime.

"The girl accused me of deceiving her while I was in Quakertown, in December, 1882," he said, "and insisted that I should marry her. I refused, and after I went away she wrote to me several times, repeating the request. I finally answered one of her letters while I was in Perth Amboy, and invited her to come. We remained that night at the hotel where I was stopping, and the next morning about 9 o'clock I invited her to take a walk with me in the woods. She walked alongside me, and asked me once or twice if I expected to marry her. She said and would make me a good wife, but I said 'No.' I made a proposal to her which she rejected, and I then struck her on the back of the neck with my fist, and she fell on her face, the blood running out of her nose and mouth. I wipped it away with my handkerchief, which was thus stained, and I threw it away."

Koop then paused, and evidently desired to stop there or repeat his previous declaration that he had left the woman where she fell, but the Chief of Police said:

"Tell us the whole truth. It is the best thing to do, because I suppose you know your handkerchief, with it your initials on it, was found."

"After she fell down on her face," Koop continued, she turned over and looking me in the eyes said; "Oh, John, don't do it.' I didn't mind that, but took the rope from round my waist and tied it around her throat. Then I lifted her up on her feet. Some of the blood got on my coat sleeve and I didn't like it. I carried and pushed her along a few feet until she stood under the branches of a tree. I threw one end of the rope over a branch. Then I hoisted her up with the rope and held her there until she died. It took about ten minutes. After tying the rope so it would look like a suicide I crawled out through the underbush to a back road and went back to the brickyard

"I remained around Perth Amboy until last September, when the body was found. Then I went to Quakertown. I began drinking hard last Monday week and kept it up until Friday because I felt

No, nobody makes a liar; but everybody feels kindlier to the liar who says, "How well you are looking!" than the honest truth-teller who exclaims, "Why! how awfully you're looking!"

What are the ladies to do about their silks in the future? The visible supply is falling off from year to year. In China the insect ravages among the silk worms have been so great that not one half as much of the raw material is now produced as a few years ago, and the decrease continues to an alarming extent. The same trouble exists elsewhere among the silk-worms, but not yet to such a serious extent. Many of the beautiful woolen fabrics of to-day are capital substitutes for silk, being neat and comfortable, and there need be but little fear of any scarcity of the supply of the raw material. The fashion of wearing fine wool instead of silk fabrics rhould be encouraged, for more reasons than one.

A rich Scottish widow has been lately doing a very sensible thing. Mr. John Elder was a very successful Glasgow ship builder, and, dying, he left a very handsome sum at his wife's disposal. Instead of spending all her spare means on an elaborate monument over his grave, or in some public square, she has arranged to hand over to the Senate of Glasgow University the munificent sum of $62,500 for the purpose of endowing a chair of naval architecture. Probably the whole world may reap some advantages from a wise bequest of this kind. The endowment of one or more chairs in practical science would probably do more good in Canada just now than expending a similar amount for some other chair in theology.

What an amount of bloodshed and murder has come out of that terrible Phœnix Park business. Nine human lives, at least, have been sacrificed, and it is to be feared that the end is not even yet. The cry for blood still is raised, and there is no concealing the fact that as each human victim is offered up, there is a great deal of evident satisfaction on one side or the other. The whole history of that bloody Dublin plot, and its results, will yet be written, but, it will never be a creditable page in the history of civilization and human progress. It sounds more like the dark ages, or the dark places of the earth in the present age, than like anything we might expect in a Christian country in the nineteenth century.

LATER.—Amanda Fluch, of Rock Hill, Pa., the girl whom John Koop said he had murdered, came to New Brunswick, noon, recently, in company with Constable Hoff of Line Lexington and Chief of Police Fourat of New Brunswick. It is desired that she shall prove her identity before the courts there, so that a new indictment shall be framed to go before the next Grand Jury. Since the present indictment charges Koop with the murder of "Amanda Fluch or Fanny Dunham," it will have to be nolle prosequid. A rumor was afloat that this had already been done. It is still believed by many that Koop committed a murder.

Amanda Flnch was found at McCormick's Hotel. She is a stout German girl, about twenty-four years old. She said she had not seen Koop in eighteen months, that she once lived with him at Quakertown, and that he had told her before he left her that he had a good deal of trouble on his mind. What that trouble was Koop never told her. She said she had never before been ten miles from home in her life, and had never visited Perth Amboy. Her stay in New Brunswick will last until she has identified Koop and has sworn to her companionship with him. Some important facts may then come out, as it is thought that she knows whether Koop's wife came to this country to meet him at Perth Amboy, and when such meeting, if there was one, occcurred.

Last May Miss Fluch was married to Aaron Wenzel, an hostler. She has a boy baby.

Not alone has it been proved that the body found in the woods was not that of Amanda Fluch, but it has been learned positively that Fannie Dunham also is alive and well. She will go to New Brunswick. She is the woman who was arraigned before Justice Garret-

Phœnix Park business. Nine human lives, at least, have been sacrificed, and it is to be feared that the end is not even yet. The cry for blood still is raised, and there is no concealing the fact that as each human victim is offered up, there is a great deal of evident satisfaction on one side or the other. The whole history of that bloody Dublin plot, and its results, will yet be written, but, it will never be a creditable page in the history of civilization and human progress. It sounds more like the dark ages, or the dark places of the earth in the present age, than like anything we might expect in a Christian country in the nineteenth century.

O'Donnell was duly hanged on Monday morning for the "removal" of Carey. He was sensible enough not to make any speech from the gallows. Poor fellow, there will be enough said about his case anyway. Few men more richly deserved hanging, and it is well that the Government did not listen to the cry raised for any respite of the sentence. Though O'Donnell and his admirers gloried in the fact of his shooting Carey he did not hesitate to save his neck by pleading that the shooting was only in self-defence and not therefore an act of vengeance against an informer. Of course he did not expect that any one would believe that this was the real cause of his bloody act, he did not want people to believe that; it was merely a technical plea, but it did not answer its purpose. It is now in order to hear another outburst about "the bloody Saxon" from certain quarters. But nowhere can more blood thirsty men be found than in these same quarters.

No wonder some of those up north European countries are so healthy, and the people so long lived! What is to prevent them? They have a good bracing climate, they certainly and not over-crowded, and there must be a wonderful immunity from doctors. What else is needed? In Sweden a medical student has to undergo ten years stuffing and study before he can become an M.D. Of course, under such a restriction, doctors ought to be pretty scarce and they ought to know a good deal before they are let at large. In Norway seven years are required, and in nearly all the rest of Europe five. In France, England and Canada the more reckless system prevails of only four years. In the United States the time seems to vary from three years to three months, according to the "college" and the amount paid. The average American "doctor" may be set down as a horrid example for the profession; but in spite of all this there are some medical men of splendid scientific attainments in the United States.

Amanda Flnch was found at McCormick's Hotel. She is a stout German girl, about twenty-four years old. She said she had not seen Koop in eighteen months, that she once lived with him at Quakertown, and that he had told her before he left her that he had a good deal of trouble on his mind. What that trouble was Koop never told her. She said she had never before been ten miles from home in her life, and had never visited Perth Amboy. Her stay in New Brunswick will last until she has identified Koop and has sworn to her companionship with him. Some important facts may then come out, as it is thought that she knows whether Koop's wife came to this country to meet him at Perth Amboy, and when such meeting, if there was one, occcurred.

Last May Miss Fluch was married to Aaron Wenzel, an hostler. She has a boy baby.

Not alone has it been proved that the body found in the woods was not that of Amanda Fluch, but it has been learned positively that Fannie Dunham also is alive and well. She will go to New Brunswick. She is the woman who was arraigned before Justice Garretson in Perth Amboy, on June 4, on a charge of intoxication. She left Perth Amboy on the following day. The only theory now held by those who think Koop's confession was based on truth, is that his wife came to this country to meet him in Perth Amboy and that it was her body which was found in the woods.

A man has no more right to say an uncivil thing than to act one; no more right to say a rude thing to another than to knock him down.

Great is he who enjoys his earthenware as if it were plate, and not less great is the man to whom all his plate is no more than earthenware.

The flowers most in favor for ball dresses are lilies of the valley, forget-me-nots, hedge roses, monthly roses, Alpine heather sprays, and red or blue salvias.

Elbow sleeves have the upper part of the cloth cut away, showing the arm to the elbow, save where it is covered with the bands that fasten the sleeves across it.

Velvet dresses are handsomest when made all of one kind of velvet, and trimmed only with a little lace, black or white, or both, or tinted to match the color of the dress.

There is scarcely a field in the whole country but needs draining. Even those which appear dry are all the better for such openings. The farmer who lends his money on mortgage while his farm is undrained, is a fool, sure, for no possible investment will pay better than draining if it is set about with any judgment whatever.

A Curious Shooting Case.

An inquest was opened at Penrith recently upon the body of Anthony Hodwin, 13 years of age, who died under remarkable circumstances. The deceased, who was a farmer's son, attended Penrith statute fair on the 18th inst., and in the afternoon, while watching some merry-go-rounds in the street, he suddenly fell, and was carried to the house of his uncle, where he died within the course of an hour fron internal bleeding. According to the opinion of three medical men who examined him, no inquest was deemed necessary, and the body was buried. After the funeral, however, the aunt of the deseased, while brushing his clothes, found blood stains upon them and a hole near the stains, and gradually the suspicion gained ground that the young lad had been shot. An order was obtained for the exhumation of the body, and recently evidence was given that the deceased when he fell was standing near a rifle gallery. A man went up to the gallery the worse for drink and took hold of a breechloading rifle, but the attendant took it from him. He picked up another rifle, and it went off in his hands. The deceased was seen to fall immediately afterward, and the post-mortem examination now showed that he had died from the effects of a wound inflicted by a cylindrical bullet a quarter of an inch in diameter, which was found behind the lining of the abdomen.—St. James' Gazette.

Queen Victoria's reign is the longest in Britain, with the exception of the three long Thirds—Henry III., who reigned fifty-six; Edward III., fifty; and George III., sixty years. Though these Thirds are long reigns they may be called short when placed beside two Kings of France. Louis XIV. reigned seventy-two years and Louis XV. fifty-nine years, from 1643 to 1774, making together 131 years.

The man who is poor puts on lots of style, and pretends he is rich, while the man who lays away thousands every year says he is losing money, and expects to go to the almshouse shortly. Strange Bible Facts.

The learned Prince of Granada, heir to the Spanish throne, imprisoned by order of the Crown, for fear he should aspire to the throne, was kept in solitary confinement in the old prison at the Place of Skulls, Madrid. After thirty-three years in this living tomb, death came to his release, and the following remarkable researches taken from the Bible, and marked with an old nail on the rough walls of his cell, told how the brain sought employment through the weary years.

In the Bible the word Lord is found 1,853 times; the word Jehovah 6,855 times, and the word Reverend but once, and that in the 9th verse of the cxith Pslam. The 8th verse of the cxviith Psalm is the middle verse of the Bible. The 9th verse of the viiith chapter of Esther is the longest verse; 35th verse, xith chapter of St. John is the shortest. In the cviith Psalm four verses are alike, the 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st. Each verse of the cxxxvith Psalm ends alike. No names or words with more than six syllables are found in the Bible. The xxxviith chapter of Isaiah and xixth chapter of 2nd Kings are alike. The word Girl occurs but once in the Bible, and that in the 3rd verse and iiird chapter of Joel. There are found in both books of the Bible, 3,586,483 letters, 773,693 words, 31,373 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books. The xxvith chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is the finest chapter to read. The Duchess of Edinburgh is said to be the best talker in the English royal family; she is very strong-willed, is the only person who dares to oppose Victoria, or who ever said "I won't" to her; cares nothing for popularity, is a superb linguist, is very plain, is at the root of her husband's quarrel with the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, whose heir he is, and does herself, and makes her husband do, pretty much as she pleases.

The will of the Rev. Robert Moffatt, D.D., for 50 years the well-known missionary in South Africa, has been proved, the value of the personal estate exceeding £3,700. The testator leaves £2,000 upon trust for his daughter Ann Fredoux for life, and his son, Robert Moffatt; and the residue of his property to his daughter Jane Gardner Moffatt.

A younger daughter of Mrs. McElroy stays at the Soldiers' Home with Nellie Arthur, and the President seems to enjoy the quiet life presided over by the two small women. One of the new improvements of science is begining to be introduced to good practical advantage every where. In Switzerland some of the railway companies now cover a portion of their carriages with a phosphorescent preparation which makes them luminous and visible at night. If the plan is not too expensive it ought to be tried in connection with our railways in Canada. Here is a good opening for scientific men with an inventive turn of the mind. The man who will supply a cheap and effective luminous paint may make great wealth for himself and save many accidents among the people.

The schooner Mary Ann Hulbert recently went down in a gale near St. Ignace Island, Lake Superior. There were twenty persons on board at the time, all of whom were drowned. She was in tow of the Kincardine, but no help could be given.

The Duchess of Edinburgh is said to be the best talker in the English royal family; she is very strong-willed, is the only person who dares to oppose Victoria, or who ever said "I won't" to her; cares nothing for popularity, is a superb linguist, is very plain, is at the root of her husband's quarrel with the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, whose heir he is, and does herself, and makes her husband do, pretty much as she pleases.

The will of the Rev. Robert Moffatt, D.D., for 50 years the well-known missionary in South Africa, has been proved, the value of the personal estate exceeding £3,700. The testator leaves £2,000 upon trust for his daughter Ann Fredoux for life, and his son, Robert Moffatt; and the residue of his property to his daughter Jane Gardner Moffatt.

A younger daughter of Mrs. McElroy stays at the Soldiers' Home with Nellie Arthur, and the President seems to enjoy the quiet life presided over by the two small women. Driving into town the other morning, he met a colored girl carrying some common flowers to put "on the baby's grave," and taking out his note-book, wrote her an order for a magnificent basket from the White House conservatories. He is passionately fond of flowers.

A pair of gloves once worn by Queen Elizabeth have been preserved in a British museum. They are of very fine leather worked with gold thread, but of a size at which our fashionable beauties would stand aghast. Good Queen Bess, however, had a hand that was fit to wield a sceptre. The thumb of her glove was five inches long and the palm measured three and one-half inches across. Another royal glove has been preserved in Henry VIII.'s "hawkes glove," in which, apparently, a goodly number of "hawkes" could find a comfortable resting-place.

Lord Coleridge is evidently a wiser man than a good many of his American admirers took him to be. He spent a few weeks in the United States and the general expectation seemed to be that as soon as he reached home he would set himself to writing a book all about the country. A good many distinguished Englishman have done so, with just about as limited means of information. The learned Chief Justice, however, states that he does not intend to do any thing of the kind, simply because he did not learn enough about the fifty millions of sovereign people to form an intelligible opinion. He has had enough judicial experience about forming opinions to be aware that some considerable knowledge of the subject is a prime necessity. What Lord Coleridge did not find out about the people of United States would fill a very large book. He does not even intend to lecture about the country. No wonder such a man is honored, at home and abroad.

LIFE IN LONDON.

Scenes In the Seven Dials—Roughs on the Rampage—A Fight with the Police.

She was tall, slender and pretty. She gazed at a kind-looking young man with indescribable love. His left arm supported her. "Ain't she a brazen-faced lass?" said a woman in the crowd, "to turn her lover upside down in company with those 'ere 'amorous eyes?"

This remark was lost on the lass, who still continued to stare at her companion with a gaze of admiration, scrutiny, and anguish. He was speaking to her.

"I'll blow your brains out!" exclaimed an invisible squeaky voice. Tzing—boom then a bark. The crowd laughed. The squeaking voice, the unmusical strains and the bark were issuing from an itinerant "Punch and Judy" which had anchored between The Grapes and The Crown, two large and popular saloons occupying two of the seven sides of the well-known Seven Dials.

It was on Saturday evening. The place swarmed with people. Respectable workmen and forbidding-looking ruffians, steady women, ribald hussies, inebriated guardsmen and blue-ribboned regulars, elbowed each other. It was a startling carnival, a show of the most melancholy aspects of the lowest orders, of their good qualities, and of their unbounded depravities. Suddenly there was a rush. Down came the little theatre, Toby, and all the poor paraphernalia of the play. To crown all, the gas set fire to the curtains. There was a cry of terror echoed by the desperate yell of the stage manager crushed under his burning house. The roughs, however, pursued their advantage. They placed themselves behind each other and made a telling charge. The pavements and gutters were strewn with bonnets, hats, broken jars, and damaged baskets. The tenderest couples were forcibly severed. A few innocents called for the police. This satisfied the miscreants that the road was clear and that they could follow up their operations. A piercing scream was heard. The companion of the strange lass was floored, and was being kicked like a dead cur. The poor girl stood unprotected among the wildest villains in the world—a crowd of thieves, ticket-of-leave men, and impenitents of all sorts, such as can only be encountered in those latitudes. Then something strange occurred. She could have tried to run away, or come to the rescue of her friend, but, after her agonizing cry of despair on being torn from him, she had remained nailed to the spot. An unhealthy, rickety villain seized her from behind, but went no further. "Ye drain creaper," said an unassuming citizen in artisan's clothes. "Ye let go, or by 'eavens——"

The mediator did not look much of a bruiser. His challenge was accepted by pumped out by the effort, they were surrounded by the miscreants who were not slow at realizing the superiority of their position. Like one man they fell on the blue coats. A more desperate encounter could not have been witnessed. The officials drew their truncheons, but the ruffians picked up stones. Both parties let out with merciless impulse. There were only four policemen. They would eventually have been cut to pieces by the natives if more men had not come to their rescue. As it was, two of them were taken to the hospital, and will probably be disabled for life.

The arrival of the reserve of constables gave the victory to the peelers, but they came too late to be of much service to the valiant champion of the blind girl, for when the constables reached Moulmouth court he was found half murdered on the ground.

Notes About Animals.

We propose here to consider some cases in which animals have seemed to reason. The importance of the subject will be recognized if we remember Darwin's admission that, had no organic being except man possessed any mental power, or if man's power had been of a wholly different nature from those of the lower animals, we should never have been able to convince ourselves that our high faculties had been gradually developed. "In Central Park, one very hot day, my attention," writes Mr. James J. Furniss, of New York, "was drawn to the conduct of an elephant which had been placed in an inclosure in the open air. On the ground was a large heap of newly-mown grass, which the sagacious animal was taking up by the trunkful and laying carefully upon his sun-heated back. He continued the operation until his back was completely thatched, when he remained quiet, apparently enjoying the result of his ingenuity. It seems to me that instinct should have prompted the elephant to eat the grass and that it was reason which caused him to use it for the purpose of diminishing the effect of the sun's rays."

"I may mention a case," says the writer, "of a kitten about half grown having mental reflection of some sort. I was sitting in one of the rooms at a house where I was stopping in Somersetshire, and hearing a knock at the front door was told not to heed it, as it was only this kitten asking admittance. Not believing it, I watched for myself, and very soon saw this kitten jump on to the door, hang by one leg, and put the other fore paw right through the knocker and rap

The mediator did not look much of a bruiser. His challenge was accepted by the scrofulous villian. He was going to kiss his unfortunate victim, who was defending herself as awkwardly as possible, when there was are iron grip on his hand. There was hardly any scuffle. The bully tried to free his hand. He might as well have tried to pull it from the grip of a vise.

There was the ground, and the brawler fell to the pavement. His hand had been crushed as effectually as though a wagon-load of stones had passed over it. "Next time," said Goliath, "ye are stretched [sent to penal servitude], my lad, maybe ye will kerse me, for I doubt whether ye will be 'hable by 'ard labor to display yer hackknowledgment of the guvner's 'ospitality, but in future ye will perhaps respect a poor blind girl."

Alas, it was true! The pretty innocent lass, with curious looks, sparkling with poignant longing, was totally blind. She could not see whether she was loved, and she thought nobody could see how much she loved. Hence her perplexing stare when on the arm of her friend. Her gallant protector had discovered her misfortune. He was not, however, to be left in quiet possession of his triumph. Indeed, Seven Dials would soon lose its right to fame if such small skirmishes could settle its spirited community.

The affray had drawn us from the Grapes and the Crown to Little Earl street, which nearly fronts Leonard coffee-bar, another face of the dial, where teetotalism united to speculation pursues a bold campaign against the liquor trade by means of tea, cocoa, and coffee, at 1 penny per mug, and of steak and kidney pudding at 4 pence. Not believing it, I watched for myself, and very soon saw this kitten jump on to the door, hang by one leg, and put the other fore paw right through the knocker and rap twice. The knocker was an ordinary shaped one, fixed in the centre of the door half way up; the top part of the door was glazed. I saw this performance dozens of times afterward, and often used to put the kitten outside to see it done. It was never known to knock when any one stood in the garden, but if one went indoors and shut it out outside, in a few minutes came the usual knock. A sister kitten to this one was never known to knock, but sat on the doorstep and entered when the door was opened, and in nine cases out of ten the knock was successful. The kitten was never taught in any way; it would knock at both front and back door."

"Many years ago," says the lady who narrated the tale, "my husband had his portrait taken by T. Philips, Sen., R. A., and subsequently went to India, leaving the portrait to be finished and framed. When it was sent home, about two years after it was taken, it was placed on the floor against the sofa, preparatory to being hung on the wall. We had then a very handsome large black-and-tan setter, which was a great pet in the house. As soon as the dog came into the room he recognized his master, though he had not seen him for two years, and went up to the picture and licked his face. When this anecdote was told to Philips he said it was the highest compliment that had ever been paid to him."—Nature Studies..

Little Earl street on a Saturday night is one of the most bustling lanes that imagination can conceive. The sides of the thoroughfare are occupied by an unbroken line of trucks loaded with cheap wares. The footpath is an interminable row of small shops, carrying on commerce at equally low figures. The screams of the costermongers, and traders competing for public favor, the blinding and whistling gas, the unsavory and hostile fumes issuing from decayed vegetables, strongly-salted fish, second-hand clothes, seasoned food, inexpensive boots, and rancid cheeses, the unmusical cries of the women, their hevelled hair, their abbreviated garments, and the barefooted and ragged children, happier than the kings, create an undescribable saturnalia.

At the top of the street, on the left-hand side going toward the Grapes, there is a sinister site named Moulmouth court. It has a narrow, low, and dark egress on Little Earl street. "Ye bloody mutilator," said an ugly man to the artisan. "I tell ye this: Ye won't disfigure hanother gentleman in yer days."

This was the signal for a murderous assault on the man by two or three score of desperadoes. In a minute they had run their prey into the dark ally. For all that, the chase was not over. The game was not a hare, but a turkey cock. Circumstances were favorable to pluck and steel, and he had both. The place was narrow, and thus he had only to deal with a minority of his assailants at a time. When I last saw him he was hitting like a semi-god.

"Kick 'is brains out or drain 'im, can't ye," said an adviser. "Go it, my pigeons."

But here the pigeons were interrupted. The police, who had been quelling another brush, for Seven Dials gives them little leisure, were now turning their attention to the new battle-field. There were not many of them, but they were stout and willing. They ran through the first ranks of the rioters, but being

The Bishop who approves of the dismissal, gives cheerful testimony to the Christian zeal and moral worth of the dismissed clergyman. That he is an earnest Christian worker no one seems to doubt, but his zeal for the good of others caused him to go beyond the bounds of eclesiastical propriety, and probably he was not in as good subjection to the higher powers in the Church as he should have been.

Word comes that another honored Minister of the same church in the same city, has just had an active hand in a veritable "tea fight" in aid of the church funds, where the "physical demonstrations" were such as to leave even the Salvation Army demonstrations a long way behind. The two matters, probably, are occupying the attention of Bishop Lewis about the same time. What the outside world will be most curious to know is whether the conduct of Rev. Dr. Wilson or Rev. W. Carey, commends itself most to the approval of the Bishop. The Worldings may come to one conclusion and the Churchmen to another. However the Bishop ought to be the best judge in regard to the important matter of orthodoxy.

A Strange Drink.

There is a story of how a man lost a wager in Pueblo, Colorado. Stepping into a large liquor shop he offered to bet ten to one that he could be blindfolded, tell the name of any liquor or wine in the house, or any mixture of liquors by the taste and smell. All went well with him at first. He named all the celebrated brands correctly. Then they handed him a glass of water. He tasted, he smelt, he tasted and smelt again, and at last, completely nonplussed, he gave it up. "Well, boys, he said, "you have got me. It seems to me as if, years ago, I struck something of the kind in the States, but it was so long ago that I have entirely forgotten it."

SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT ELECTED.

On Thursday of last week Sir R. J. Cartwright was elected for South Huron by acclamation, no candidate being found who would venture to oppose him. By this act the people of South Huron have paid a well merited tribute of respect to one of the most self-sacrificing, high minded independent statesmen in Canada, and have restored to the House of Commons one of its most brilliant debaters, especially on financial matters, which it lost through the infamous Gerrymander. The better thinking men of all parties are, we believe, glad that Sir Richard is once more to take part in the counsels of the nation. His commanding abilities and large fund of information qualify him for the highest positions, while his sterling honesty makes his services still more desirable. Sir Richard's name has never, during his whole career, been associated with jobbery. He is a man to be trusted, no matter in what position he is placed.

In these days of enterprising journalism the lives of politicians are very closely scanned. The skeleton in the cupboard of Sir John Macdonald has frequently —The official returns for Algoma show a majority of 114 for Mr. Lyon, the Reform candidate.

—The Standard devoted a column last week to tell its readers that "David Wright Allison must go"—and that even before the House meets. The Tory editor has no doubt be this time learned that he was a little too previous in making the announcement. An application was made last Saturday in Toronto by the petitioner's counsel to have a day fixed for trial without giving the respondent time to enter preliminary objections, but it was overruled, and the trial cannot now take place till after the session. The object of these proceedings is quite plain. The desire of the men who are acting for Mr. Pruyn was to force on the trial and take Mr. Allison by surprise. In this they have been thwarted, and it is highly probable that when the case does come to trial they will again find they have counted without their hosts. David Wright Allison is going—to stay member for Lennox. In a few days he will go—to Ottawa. That's the way he is go—ing.

—Interest in the municipal elections in town has largely centred in the Reeveship. If any one thing more than another was calculated to convince people that it was time to draw the the rein on the ex-Warden it was his egotistical speech nomination day. Every word he uttered fairly bristled with the man's self conceit. Why he as much as told the ratepayers he was the only man in the town fit to represent their interests! Mr. Aylsworth's modest remarks afforded a striking contrast to his opponent's bluster, which had its effection the audience. Anybody who knows the two men must admit that as a practical every day business man and municipal representative, Mr. Aylsworth is, if anything, Mr. Wilson's superior, and the more Mr. Wilson talks about Mr. Aylsworth's learning to creep before trying to walk, he will only keep adding to his opponent's majority. The difference between the two men is that Mr Aylsworth in the council and out of it acts upon his own judgment, while Mr. Wilson draws his inspiration in municipal matters largely from A. H. Roe. Our belief is that the ratepayers will take the view that Mr. Wilson's services, at the estimate he places upon them, are much too valuable to accept gratuitously and will leave him at home. The town is already under a far much larger debt of gratitude to him than it can ever hope to wipe off.

THE U. E. LOYALISTS' CENTENNIAL.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—I have just finished the reading of two letters in the Toronto Mail on the above subject. The writer, Rev. R. S. Forneri, B. D., announces himself as the rector of Adolphustown; by which I presume he means that he sustains that relation to the Episcopalian Church of that township. I wonder if Mr. F. has not learned by this time that there is no ecclesiastical establish-

In these days of enterprising journalism the lives of politicians are very closely scanned. The skeleton in the cupboard of Sir John Macdonald has frequently been brought to public view, and only a few weeks ago Sir Charles Tupper was brought face to face with a page of his private history which he no doubt wished was entirely obliterated. But Sir Richard Cartwright's worst enemy can find nothing in his public or private life discreditable to the slightest degree. The worst his opponents can say of him is that he is a "renegade Tory," and they make a great deal of this. According to their idea it is a great crime to desert the Tory ship, even if every plank in it is rotten to the core. But an impartial critic, in writing of Sir Richard, a few days ago, says that he was never a servile follower of the Conservative party. In other than strictly party votes the government did not know where to place him—he maintained an independent course. But even if he was in his youth the high Tory his opponents say he was, it was merely the result of tuition, and it is to his credit that in more mature years, after witnessing the political iniquity of the Conservatives, that he became disgusted and transferred his support to men of strict integrity and to a party of progressive principles. Since his alliance with the Liberal party he has been the subject of abuse of every Tory print and stump speaker, but he has weathered the storm bravely and in a few weeks he will occupy his old position in the House, where his presence will be felt and by none more keenly than by Sir

The difference between the two men is that Mr Aylsworth in the council and out of it acts upon his own judgment, while Mr. Wilson draws his inspiration in municipal matters largely from A. H. Roe. Our belief is that the ratepayers will take the view that Mr. Wilson's services, at the estimate he places upon them, are much too valuable to accept gratuitously and will leave him at home. The town is already under a far much larger debt of gratitude to him than it can ever hope to wipe off.

THE U. E. LOYALISTS' CENTENNIAL.

SIR,—I have just finished the reading of two letters in the Toronto Mail on the above subject. The writer, Rev. R. S. Forneri, B. D., announces himself as the rector of Adolphustown; by which I presume he means that he sustains that relation to the Episcopalian Church of that township. I wonder if Mr. F. has not learned by this time that there is no ecclesiastical establishment in Canada. He demands special consideration for the proposal he makes, because he is the son of an Italian refugee. While congratulating him upon the heritage into which he has entered, I will venture to suggest, that, having been delivered from beneath the iron heel of an ecclesiastical despotism, and enjoying the protection of a country which will tolerate no state church, and recognizes no religious monopoly, and especially having come to reside in a county, the vast majority of the inhabitants of which are not of his communion, he above all others should hesitate before he assumes such extensive jurisdiction as his signature indicates. Writing to the papers of this county, he claims the honor of having originated the idea of a celebration; but in his letters to the Mail he thinks it best to make no such claim. Certain it is, however, that before he was appointed to his present parish, a celebration was determined upon, and only the best method of making it successful was under discussion. Of much in Mr. F's. letter there will be hearty approval. His words are none too flattering, when he speaks of those brave men and the patriotism and self-sacrifice that make their memory so fragrant.

To permit 1884 to pass without a celebration, would, he argues, prove us unmindful of one of the brightest and most important events in our country's history. An appropriate monument should be erected and no place has stronger claims to be the scene of what should be one of the grandest celebrations ever held in Canada than Adolphustown. So say we all.

There will also be great unanimity with much that he has written upon the character of the proposed monument. With him we deplore that the place of their sepulchre lieth waste and that the wall is broken down. This reproach must be wiped away.

he was never a servile follower of the Conservative party. In other than strictly party votes the government did not know where to place him—he maintained an independent course. But even if he was in his youth the high Tory his opponents say he was, it was merely the result of tuition, and it is to his credit that in more mature years, after witnessing the political iniquity of the Conservatives, that he became disgusted and transferred his support to men of strict integrity and to a party of progressive principles. Since his alliance with the Liberal party he has been the subject of abuse of every Tory print and stump speaker, but he has weathered the storm bravely and in a few weeks he will occupy his old position in the House, where his presence will be felt and by none more keenly than by Sir John Macdonald. All the malice that has been poured out upon Sir Richard in late years has been inspired by the Chieftain, whose dread of him is only equaled by his hatred. On the floor of the House Sir Richard is more that a match for Sir John and his presence there is scarcely less welcome to the Premier than would be Lucifer himself. To get rid of so formidable an opponent, Sir John, in his infamous Gerrymander, robbed him of his constituency, but the people of Huron have fittingly condemned the act and nobly vindicated Sir Richard by his election on Thursday.

The Reformers of Lennox unite with those of Huron in their rejoicings and look forward to many years of usefulness for the member elect.

—The London Advertiser, in commenting on a paragraph from THE EXPRESS on politics in municipal matters, says:—"It was the Mail itself that advised the carrying on of municipal contests on party grounds, and after the elections it analyzed the results to show Tory gains. Among others it claimed that Mr. Ed. Meredith being elected as mayor was a proof of the Tory proclivities in London. This year both candidates for mayor of this city are Reformers, and if we were as silly as the Mail we would claim that this is because the Tories dare not run a man. But we feel a good deal of satisfaction in reflecting that we are not so silly."

—We have no hesitation in advocating the cause of ex-Coun. Cliff for the Deputy Reeveship, and in doing so we cannot be accused of introducing politics into the contest. Mr. Cliff is a dyed-in-the-wool Tory, but we believe him to be a straightforward honest man. He has not at the dictation of party condoned robbery of the municipal treasury, nor has he approved the vilest of blasphemy. These reasons alone would influence us in Mr. Cliff's favour, but added to them the knowledge that he is a much more practical and useful man in the council than Mr. Carscallen, convince us he is the right man for the position, and we trust he will be elected.

ish, a celebration was determined upon, and only the best method of making it successful was under discussion. Of much in Mr. F's. letter there will be hearty approval. His words are none too flattering, when he speaks of those brave men and the patriotism and self-sacrifice that make their memory so fragrant.

To permit 1884 to pass without a celebration, would, he argues, prove us unmindful of one of the brightest and most important events in our country's history. An appropriate monument should be erected and no place has stronger claims to be the scene of what should be one of the grandest celebrations ever held in Canada than Adolphustown. So say we all.

There will also be great unanimity with much that he has written upon the character of the proposed monument. With him we deplore that the place of their sepulchre lieth waste and that the wall is broken down. This reproach must be wiped away. Very properly are we reminded, however, that to expend our veneration for the illustrious dead upon such a work would be unworthy their successors. "No towering monument of stone or marble upon a pedestal of corresponding magnitude with appropriate inscription." (These are the rev. gentleman's words and they are true and beautiful) can fittingly express our estimate of their noble deeds.

Now had Mr. Forneri concluded his letters when he had written so enthusiastically upon the general question he would doubtless have been hailed by the originators of the movement as a sincere and disinterested helper. But when in the closing sentences to which all previously written is but a mere preface, he comes to furnish us with his opinion as to what said monument should be, he must not wonder if some will suspect that his chief design is to take advantage of the coming celebration in order to carry out a sectarian enterprise.

The writer cannot imagine (although it is evident that he has a very widespread imagination) any motive that would present every church helping to carry out his scheme. I regret that he gives us credit for so little regard for the memory of the men who fought for and won the liberties we enjoy in Canada. Were all the U. E. Loyalists Episcopalians? Were the ministers of that church their only religious teachers? Are their successors, their children and grandchildren in connection with it now? Mr. Forneri has records which are as old as 1820. I have records that reach further back than that. They tell of the preaching of the gospel in Adolphustown by the pioneer Methodist preachers as early as 1791. In that year the Rev. Wm. Losee organized the Bay of Quinte Circuit, and in 1818 Mr. Geo. H. Detlor, who is still living, was the Recording Steward. We have heard, our forefathers have told us, of the persecution so which they were subjected by those who ought to establish in Canada a system of religious tyranny. But the old U. E. Loyalists would have none of such. Does Mr. Forneri help his plan by the extensive quotation of names from his parish register, which he sends to the Toronto Mail? He does not. And he knew that while the long array might possibly lead those at a distance to suppose that all these families were Episcopalians, that to insert them in his letters they are left out. Ruttan, Boge Ferguson, Canniff, Vanalstine, C Sills, Peterson; I think I recogni the names of some of the most Methodist families in Lennox. rector, when he compared his pari of a few years ago with those of to found that these families are nea fellowship with another church, the erection of a memorial church nomination to which these familie belong, it would have been more able. Transferred as Mr. Forneri has recently been from Belleville to Adolphustown, no one will blame him when looking from the deck of a steamer on the Bay of Quinte upon the high ridge on which the rectory stood, he should purpose the erection of a magnificent Episcopalian Church. In imagination he informs us he "beheld by its side a church in the early English style, built of stone from the Kingston quarries with a massive tower on the south-west surmounted by battlements", etc., etc. The vision was unenact that such a national memorial church must be the property of no denomination, and certainly not of a denomination which refuses to acknowledge the rights of other churches, and would not permit any—save two or three—of the many ministers in this county to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ from its pulpit.

But when the rev. gentleman so indulges his fancy that he actually imagines he sees all the ministers and members of other churches who seldom receive from himself and associates in the ministry aught but the most disrespectful treatment, aiding in carrying out his most presumptuous proposal, it will be kind of someone to startle him out of his dream. On Christmas evening at an entertainment held in the old Adolphustown Church, which is built partly out of the material of the first Methodist Church ever erected in Canada, nearly $3,000 were subscribed to erect a Centenary Church next year. This is, however, a purely denominational memorial and will not prevent our people from entering heartily into the arrangements for a provincial or county celebration and the erection of a monument which will bear no sectarian name. Let Mr. Forneri's congregation go and do likewise. The men whom we honor, their successors, the event to be celebrated, demand that the celebration and the monument be such as all good and loyal people, irrespective of religious distinctions, will heartily approve and endeavour to promote. Perhaps the committee to be appointed by the general meeting called for the 10th of January, may decide that no monument would so worthily perpetuate the memory of the U. E. Loyalists as a church. If it is so determined the committee may rely upon the co-operation of the people in this county. But the committee will, I am confident, also enact that such a national memorial church must be the property of no denomination, and certainly not of a denomination which refuses to acknowledge the rights of other churches, and would not permit any—save two or three—of the many ministers in this county to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ from its pulpit.

TERRIBLE RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Twenty-Three Workmen Killed and Ten Wounded.

A painful accident occurred near the Humber, west of Toronto, Wednesday morning on the Great Western division of the Grand Trunk. Full of life, and health and hope forty-three men left the city on the suburban train for their work at the Bolt Works, between High Park and the Humber. Half an hour afterwards many of them lay dead in the ditch, bruised and broken, and terrible to look upon. Nearly all of them were frightfully mangled, some with both legs crushed to a jelly, others with their legs burnt to a cinder, while others had their skulls crushed in, arms off and bodies mangled out of shape. It appears that the suburban train, of which Mr. Carter is the conductor, left the station about nine minutes late, and was going at the usual rate of speed. Just after it had passed the toll-gate Kennedy, the engineer, gave a whistle, and thinking that the line was quite clear, steamed ahead. On the south side of the track there is a heavy growth of trees, which prevented the engineer from seeing very far ahead, and at the terminus of these trees there is a sharp curve and a heavy grade. The sound of the whistle had hardly died away before an engine, attached to which were two cabooses, appeared around the corner, coming towards the dummy at a high rate of speed. Kennedy reversed the engine, but seeing that nothing could avert a collision, he shrieked out a warning and he and the fireman jumped, rolling down the slight embankment. Mr. Carter, who was passing from the first to the second car—there were only two attached to the dummy—heard the cry, and looking out, saw the train within forty yards of him. He yelled out "jump boys," and threw himself forward, and as he did so the trains met. The engine struck the dummy and knocked the boiler clean through the car, crushing the unfortunate passengers in every direction, and pinning many of them to the floor. The impetus was so great that the engine actually mounted the truck of the dummy, which, strange to say, kept the rails, and remained there on a balance. The engineer of the train that ran into the dummy, when he saw that a collision was inevitable, sprang from the engine and escaped with a few slight wounds, but Thomas, the fireman, was not so fortunate. When he saw his companion jump, he leaned over the side of the engine, and as he did so the collision occurred, and he was buried in the ruins, his death being instantaneous. Nearly all of the passengers were employed at the Humber Bolt Works, and they were on their way to work when the collision occurred. With the exception of five or six the whole thirty-seven occupied seats in the front car, and so far as can be at present learned, only one man—his name is supposed to be O'Donohue—escaped from being killed or wounded.

The conductor of the freight train, George Barber, it is said, is to blame for running in without orders. He was promptly put under arrest, awaiting the result of the inquest. The affair has cast a gloom over Toronto as many of the men resided in the city with their families.

THE KILLED

OBITUARY.

The Late Col. Geo. H. Detlor, Ex-M.P.

Monday morning about 11 o'clock Col. Geo. H. Detlor breathed his last at the residence of his son-in-law, James Perry, Esq. The old gentleman for the past few years has been very infirm, but up to a few months ago he had full possession of his faculties. He was a prominent figure in the Bay District in his time, being a man of ability and of strict integrity. The following sketch of his life written by himself some twenty years ago, which by the kind permission of his relatives we print, affords a much more accurate account of his life's work than any we could write :—

"The following passage by St. John I wish may be taken as the foundation of a funeral sermon in my case. Selected by me in Nov., 1863,—2nd Timothy, 4th Chapter, 7th and 8th verses. G. H. D."

'I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Hence forth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge will give me that day, and not to me only but unto all them also that love his appearing.'

"And the following sketch of my life may be read on the occasion of the funeral services at any time which may suit the minister officiating:—

"The subject of this notice was born at the residence of his Grandfather Detlor, in the township of Fredericksburgh on the 24th day of July, 1794.

"In the year 1802 his father and family removed to the town of York (now city of Toronto) where he was employed as clerk in the Inspector General's office and as bookkeeper for a merchant from 1804 until the time of his death which, he met in the defense of his country at the time of the invasion of the Americans in April, 1813.

"His grandfather and mother were members of the first Methodist society which was formed by Philip Embury in the city of New York. In consequence of their loyalty to the British Crown they were compelled to leave the United States. After taking up their residence in Fredericksburgh their house was a constant home for the Methodist preachers, as was likewise the house of his father while living in the town of York. After the close of the war he removed his mother and family to Fredericksburgh, where she owned a farm—himself entering into the mercantile business with the late Hugh C. Thomson, of the town of Kingston. In 1818 he married the second daughter of the late John Roblin, of Adolphustown.

"The partnership with Mr. Thomson was dissolved—both retiring from the mercantile business—Mr. Thomson engaging in printeng and publishing and he in farming and milling. In 1829 he re-commenced trading near the present town of Napanee and eventually removed to the (then) village of Napanee.

"In 1836 he was elected to the Provincial Parliament to represent, with the late John S. Cartwright, Esq., the united counties of Lennox and Addington. During the rebellion of 1837-38 his business became deranged to that extent that he again retired therefrom. In the year 1845 he received employment by the District Council in regulating the back assessment of lands; in October, 1847, was appointed to the office of District

PERSONAL.—Mr. John M. Lyman was home a week during the holidays.... Miss Tina Wellington also was home to spend her vacation. She has been re-engaged to conduct the Mill Haven school for '84.... Miss Libbie Collins of Bath spent the vacation here as the guest of Miss Wellington.... Miss Kate Edgar of Croydon has been engaged to teach in Enterprise school.

TEA-MEETING.—The tea-meeting in the C. M. Church Christmas evening was a grand success. Music was furnished by Miss Lyman, Miss Walker, Miss Wagar, and our Tamworth friends. Recitations were given by Miss Ella Walker, Miss Black and Mr. J. M. Lyman. Speeches by Messrs. Jackson and Pyke of Enterprise and Revs. Faull and Bates of Tamworth. The chair was ably filled by Mr. Caleb Raymond. The proceeds amounted to $100.

to the British Crown they were compelled to leave the United States. After taking up their residence in Fredericksburgh their house was a constant home for the Methodist preachers, as was likewise the house of his father while living in the town of York. After the close of the war he removed his mother and family to Fredericksburgh, where she owned a farm—himself entering into the mercantile business with the late Hugh C. Thomson, of the town of Kingston. In 1818 he married the second daughter of the late John Roblin, of Adolphustown.

"The partnership with Mr. Thomson was dissolved—both retiring from the mercantile business—Mr. Thomson engaging in printeng and publishing and he in farming and milling. In 1829 he re-commenced trading near the present town of Napanee and eventually removed to the (then) village of Napanee.

"In 1836 he was elected to the Provincial Parliament to represent, with the late John S. Cartwright, Esq., the united counties of Lennox and Addington. During the rebellion of 1837-38 his business became deranged to that extent that he again retired therefrom. In the year 1845 he received employment by the District Council in regulating the back assessment of lands; in October, 1847, was appointed to the office of District Clerk, and in May, 1848, received his appointment of Appraiser in the Customs Department at the Port of Kingston. The first office he resigned in 1861, the latter he occupied until March, 1872.

HIS RELIGIOUS LIFE.

In October, 1817, he joined the Wesleyan Church under the late Rev. Thos. Madden. In 1818 was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Quarterly Board of the Bay of Quinte Circuit. On the death of the late Rev. D. Dunham, he succeeded him as Secretary and Steward, which office he held down to 1838, at which period he removed temporarily from the Circuit. On returning to Napanee was re-appointed Steward and Class Leader, resigning both in 1848 on removing to Kingston. In 1849 in Kingston he was appointed a Class Leader and on the return of his family to Napanee he resigned that office and was appointed Steward and remained a member of a class in Kingston until the 8th of October, 1865, when he joined the class under Bro. J. Hawley which met after the Sabbath service in Napanee.

"His trust in the merits of the atonement was clear and satisfactory, having an assurance that he had a hope sure and steadfast of an inheritance 'where the wicked cease from troubling and where the weary be at rest.'"

The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon, and considering the weather, was very largely attended.

Memorial Service

The funeral sermon of the late Geo. H. Detlor will be delivered in the C. M. Church next Sunday evening by Rev. M. L. Pearson.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

MUNICIPAL.—At the nomination for the township council of Tyendinaga yesterday Mr. Hanley, reeve, and Mr. Munro, councillor, were re-elected by acclamation. D. L. Brown, Esq., was also elected councillor by acclamation. We heartily congratulate Mr. Brown, who is brother-in-law to Mr. Allison, M. P. for Lennox, on his election, and trust that in his new position he may faithfully serve the best interests of the people. The contest between the 1st and 2nd deputy-reeveship is between Messrs. Tripp and Nash, and Anderson and West, the last named in both cases being members of the last council.

POLITICAL.—"Whom the gods destroy they first make mad." Does this apply to the present desperation of the Conservative party? Fairly beaten and completely routed in the late contest in Lennox, do they now hope by some quirk of the law to obtain the seat for the county? To all intelligent outsiders not blinded by the smoke of the fray it has been manifest that the great storm on the day of the election did far greater injury to Mr. Allison than his opponent, and that if the battle had to be fought over again he would be confirmed in his seat as representative of the people by a more decisive majority than he now has.

Railway Accident.

Frank Spink, Wilton Avenue, Toronto, some time ago received a bad injury by an accident on the G. T. R. The severe contusions were quickly healed by the use of Hagyard's Yellow Oil.

ONE OF THE MOST FREQUENT RESULTS OF depraved nutrition, caused by indigestion and imperfect assimilation of food, is the unsightly eruptions which disfigure the face of so many people. The blood being poor and deficient in material for repairing and building up the tissues, does not properly nourish the skin, and disagreeable humors manifest themselves, the general health at the same time becoming impaired. Radical and permanent cure results from restoring the digestive apparatus, and vitalizing the circulation, which is effected by Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya, a purely physiological blood-maker and purifier that imparts great freshness of tone and color to the complexion by promoting nutrition.

Highly Agreeable.

One very valuable feature of Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup is, that it is highly agreeable to take, and all varieties of worms, tape worm included, can be safely expelled by it without recourse to harsh and sickening drugs.

Pimples and Blotches.

Call at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbol Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores, Rough Skin. It cures when others fail. Try it.

A Christmas Vigil.

BY ETTA W. PIERCE.

The wild storm shakes the cabin, she hears the breakers roar,
The high tides of December beat on the groaning shore.
Black crouch the sunken ledges, beneath the waters white,
And loud the bar is wailing, at Christmas in the night.

With spectral light the candle flares on the cabin wall;
With spectral gleams the embers to cold gray ashes fall.
The death-watch in the rafter ticks solemnly and loud,
Against the window flutters the white snow like a shroud.
Only the friendly beacon, set in its tower to mark
The rocks and boiling channel, burns red upon the dark.

In drift of yellow tresses she stands a pallid ghost,
And hears the fierce northeaster assail the shrinking coast.
The tears weigh down her lashes—with trembling and affright
She keeps Love's mournful vigil: at Christmas in the night:

God help the souls that travel the awful sea in ships!
Upon the cabin hearth-stone she kneels with clay-cold lips.
While creaks the gusty rafter, and fades the glaring light,
She sobs her sad petition, at Christmas in the night.

"Oh, Babe, who in the manger of far-off Bethlehem lay—
Who came to cure our sorrows, and take our sins away—
Oh, Christ, who walked the waters, and calmed the raging sea—
Oh, dear Lord, born at Christmas, have mercy upon me!

Thou holdest wind and tempest within Thy holy hand.
Secure, thro' storm and darkness, my homebound voyager keep!
On this, thy blessed birth-night, oh, guide him o'er the deep,
The reefs are sharp and cruel, the surf is strong and white.
My heart with fear is breaking, at Christmas in the night!"

The winds of heaven grew silent, the tempest stole away.

CHAPTER V.

The days wore on drearily and monotonously, filled with work and excitement for Mrs. Bruce and her daughter, but presenting nothing but one dull blank to the bride-elect. written too sentimentally, Nora? Are my words weak and unmanly? Well, for to-night at least they may stand. If the shadow that falls upon me as I write means nothing, if I come back safe and sound to-morrow, your eyes will never rest upon them. And, if it is ordered otherwise, you will read them in the softening shadows of death. And now, my own darling Nora, if it must be, good-night."

Nora dropped the letter with a shuddering cry, and lifted a picture from the desk—a picture so like the original that, meeting the frank blue eyes with their brave trustful smile, she could almost have believed that Arthur had indeed come back from the shadow-world to look upon her once more.

To look upon and find her—how? She laughed aloud, a fierce unnatural laugh, as she thought of the picture his generous fancy had drawn and the reality he would be forced to look upon. In twenty years time he would find her still Nora Bruce, still true to a lover in the shadow-world. So he wrote, and thought; and here she was, in lesss than two years, burning the words that ashamed and tortured her on the eve of her wedding-day.

Burning them! Ah, no, she had not strength for that! She gathered the papers up and pressed them passionately to her pale lips. She would lock them up, would never look on them again; but see the paper on which Arthur's hand had rested, the words his pen had traced, scorch and shrivel into nothingness within the cruel flames she could not and she would not; there was sacrilege in the very thought.

"Forgive me, Arthur!" she cried wildly. "Oh, my darling, if you could but know!"

Her pretty head fell forward on the desk, on the crushed papers, on the pictured face which after to-night the girl might look upon no more, and for a brief space of time something like a sweet and solemn peace fell over her, a feeling as though she were alone with her dead and held communion with them. Intense pain wrought to frenzy had proved its own anæsthetic, and for a long while she neither feared nor suffered more.

How long this strange trance of peace lasted she could not say; she was roused from it by a slight touch, to find Cristine fully dressed beside her, her hand upon her shoulder and a curious mocking smile in her eyes.

"Were you asleep, or had you fainted, Nora?" she asked kindly—Cristine from the moment in which she reconciled herself to the engagement had grown wonderfully kind. "Do you know that you have barely left yourself time to dress for dinner?"

The days wore on drearily and monotonously, filled with work and excitement for Mrs. Bruce and her daughter, but presenting nothing but one dull blank to the bride-elect. Afterwards she never thought of this as a period of sharp pain; all her senses were mercifully dulled, and, as she told herself again, with a curious thrill of triumph, her heart was dead.

"She bears it beautifully," Mrs. Bruce said to her daughter, in one of the rare intervals that visiting and being visited, shopping and submission to the milliners' and dressmakers' caprices, now allowed them. "I never thought that Nora would have been so docile."

But Cristine, much keener-sighted than her mother, shook her blonde head with a very dubious look.

"You are not out of the wood yet, mother," she said sneeringly. "I would not count too much on her placidity if I were you; there is such a thing as a lull before a storm, you know. You may not have a peeress step-daughter after all.

Mrs. Bruce grew suddenly pale, and was absolutely unhappy for the two following days; but nothing came of the spiteful prophecy, nothing had come on the eve of Nora Bruce's wedding-day.

The house was full of guests, and gay with the bustle of preparation; girl-voices rang out in every corridor, silk dresses "swished" and high-heeled shoes pattered continually up and down the stairs; carts of every description stopped perpetually at the door, milliners' girls, confectionery men, florists, jewellers, haunted the house.

Only in one room where the bride-elect sat, white and rigid, by the little brass-bound desk in which all her girlish secrets lay, was any semblance of peace to be found; and here in truth was the fiercest unrest of all.

How long she had sat there she did not know. The sun sank lower and lower, the clock struck six, and the sound aroused her at last. What she had to do must be done quickly. Lord de Gretton's wife must take no souvenir of Arthur Beaupre into her new life. With cold trembling fingers she opened the letters—Arthur's letters—out before her. Nora, roused to duty and misery once more, thrust the papers and picture into the desk—not, she knew, before Cristine had seen them and guessed shrewdly what they were; but they did not trouble her. It was her own conscience she feared, and not Cristine Singleton.

"I did not know it was so late," Nora answered wearily, pushing the hair out of her heavy eyes, and revealing so tragic a face that her step-sister said sharply—

"You have been crying, child. What will Lord de Gretton say?"

"Lord de Gretton cannot claim any control over my tears until this time to-morrow," Nora answered, while her tremulous fingers tangled the heavy hair they vainly tried to reduce te order.

"Shall I not call your maid?" Cristine asked; but Nora shook her head in vehement refusal. The sharp-eyed Frenchwoman was a terror to which she must accustom herself; but for to-night, at least, she would be free.

"Then let me help you," Miss Singleton persisted; "you will dress yourself by midnight at your present rate of progress on. Come, Nora; it is for the last time."

And the first, she might have said with equal truth. Many a time and oft, in the old happy days. when Nora was the least-considered person in her father's house, and had no golden future spreading out befor her, many a time had she dressed Cristine Singleton for ball or pic-nic, plaited the pale silky hair, laced the cheap pretty dresses, and sent her forth to conquest, looking her very best; but never before had she proffered her services to Nora. The thought flashed across the the girl's mind, forcing a ghost of a smile to her pale lips; but she banished it at once, and quietly accepted the offer. Cristine would stay, she knew; so it would be an easier thing to have her busy, with hands and eyes alike occupied, than sitting there watching her every movement.

There were not many in all—half-a-dozen notes sent with flowers and books and music, a few genuine love-letters written on board the transport, full of high courage, softened by tenderest pity for the girl he had left behind him, and, last of all, that written on the even of the engagement in which he fell. No wonder that the girl's tears fell thick and fast upon this legacy of love!

"If the fortune of war should go against me, you must not grieve too long," the poor young fellow wrote. "Your love has made me so happy, I could not think that even my death should bring you lasting grief. You will never quite forget me, Nora; you will hardly choose another love, though in the long life that spreads before you such things would be natural enough. But you have faithful eyes, my darling. I close my own and look once more into their clear gray depths, and, looking, I can fancy they will ever light up for another as they lighted once for me. I think that, if I could come back from the grave twenty years hence, I should find you still Nora Bruce, still true to a lover in the shadowy world.

"Mind, I do not wish this, Nora. It is only an idle fancy, and I hardly think it brings me comfort, selfish as my great love makes me. A life of resignation and patient grief is not the lot for which my bright warm-hearted Nora was born. Be happy in your own way, choose your own walk in life, and know that, if I could pierce the veil, and follow your progress through the world that I have done with, I should be best pleased to see you walking in the sunshine, and only casting back from time to time a soft regretful look to that dark-shadowed past in which I played my part. "Then let me help you," Miss Singleton persisted; "you will dress yourself by midnight at your present rate of progress on. Come, Nora; it is for the last time."

And the first, she might have said with equal truth. Many a time and oft, in the old happy days. when Nora was the least-considered person in her father's house, and had no golden future spreading out befor her, many a time had she dressed Cristine Singleton for ball or pic-nic, plaited the pale silky hair, laced the cheap pretty dresses, and sent her forth to conquest, looking her very best; but never before had she proffered her services to Nora. Cristine would stay, she knew; so it would be an easier thing to have her busy, with hands and eyes alike occupied, than sitting there watching her every movement.

Under her light and skillful touches Nora was quickly dressed and made ready; and, as she stood before the long glass, fastening the ear-rings in her ears, she thought with a sharp pang, how small a trace the inner anguish she endured had left upon her face, how radiant she looked in the maize-colored silk and soft showers of black lace in which it had pleased Cristine to dress her.

A tap at the door was answered by Cristine; and Nora thought, but was not sure, that she heard the maid say—

"A letter for Miss Bruce."

Letters had come by fifties and hundreds to her of late; so naturally she did not attach much importance to this. She was rather surprised however when five, ten minutes passed away, and Cristine did not return—the more so as the dinner-bell now sounded, and Nora saw that she had left her fan and gloves upon the dreasing-table.

Her room was at the other end of the long corridor. Nora had to pass it on her way down; so she took the gloves and fan with her, meaning to leave them with her if sho was there, or carry them to the drawing-room if she had gone dawn. The door stood slightly ajar. She pushed it open carelessly, and, to her horror and amazement, saw Miss Singleton lying in a dead faint on the ground, For a moment she stood staring helplessly, paralysed by a sort of superstitious terror.

Cristine had left so short a time before, full of health and spirits. Nora had noticed how pretty she looked in the soft creamy pink that always suited her best and supplied the one thing lacking to her coldly regular beauty; and now what had stricken her down like this? Cristine was not given to fainting. For the moment Nora thought that she was indeed dead; and envied her with an envy that was achingly intense. Cristine, who needed it not, had sudden peace, a swift and easy passage from all the pain and heart-breakings of this world, while she——

"Cristine!" the girl cried hurriedly, as the other stirred, and brought her back to the reality of the scene. Her envy had been premature; this was not death; already the blue eyes were widely open, and the pale lips parted in a gasping cry.

Nora knelt beside her, raised the golden head, and bathed the gray face with eau-de-Cologne. Gradually the girl's senses came back, her eyes lost their stony stare, her breath came more freely, and she tried to draw herself away.

"You are better now, Cristine?"

She started at the sound of Nora's voice, and gave a quick look of angry terror—a most inexplicable look, even admitting that her mind still wandered.

"How did you come here?" she asked abruptly.

"How is it you are in this condition?" Nora said quietly. "You were quite well when you left me, Cristine. What has happened since?"

She grew suddenly scarlet, stared straight into the other's eyes, as though she would read her inmost thoughts, then turned away, saying shortly, almost sullenly—

"I ran too quickly. I felt a sharp pain here"—touching her left side—"and I remember nothing more."

Nora stared at her, a little incredulously perhaps—the explanation seemed so improbable. A run across the corridor upset Cristine Singleton — Cristine, who would dance from midnight to dawn and never turn a hair, who was the skillfullest tennis-player in all Nettleton! The girl who knew her best could hardly believe it. Yet there was no gainsaying her ghastly looks.

"Go down, Nora," she said, as the great gong gave its final clang. "I will follow almost directly."

"Shall I send Mrs. Bruce to you?" Nora asked doubtfully. It seemed cruel to leave her thus, and yet she knew she must go.

But Cristine negatived the idea, and entreated her to say nothing of her illness, trembling so violently all the time that the girl thought she would soon betray herself, whether she kept her secret or no. Argument only served to irritate her, and time began to press; so at last, with extreme reluctance, Miss Bruce went.

It hardly seemed likely that Cristine would make her appearance that night; but almost before the guests filed in stately fashion into the great dining-room, and just as Mrs. Bruce began to feverish glitter of her light eyes. "Bed is the best place in the world for you, and the sooner you are asleep the better."

"I do feel worn out," Cristine confessed, with a queer smile, "and, as chief bridesmaid, I should like to look my best to-morrow. Well, Nora, good-night. Hark! What is that?"

It was the mighty voice of "Big Ben" floating through the open window, beating the twelve solemn strokes that told the great restless city that another day was dead.

The girls listened in breathless silence till the last vibration died away, each stroke falling with deadly import on Nora Bruce's strained sense of hearing, and bringing a stranger light to Cristine Singleton's face. With the last, she flung both arms around her sister's neck and kissed her with a sort of exultant passion.

"Long life and happiness to our bonny bride!" she cried, in shrill vibrating tones. "Fate has been kind to me. Lady de Gretton, remember always that I was the first to offer my congratulations and good wishes on your wedding-morning."

CHAPTER VI.

"It was the prettiest wedding of the season!" On that point complimentary friends, fashionable reporters and the rougher critics gathered in the ultra-fashionable church to witness the gorgeously-mounted ceremony were alike agreed; and, if the last were rather disposed to think that a younger bridegroom would have made the picture complete, even these admitted that Lord de Gretton, with his slender upright figure and well-preserved handsome face, was still a stately and a personable man.

Ten bridesmaids, dressed in the latest bridal fashion, with veils and wreaths and shimmering satin dresses, with lockets bearing the blent initials of the bridal pair in diamonds, followed Nora Bruce to the altar, and, as they posed picturesquely behind her, envied the pale bride in their inmost hearts.

They were all, with the exception of Cristine, "damsels of high degree," chosen from the circle af Lord de Gretton's friends, knowing nothing of and caring nothing for the bride, and secretly resenting the fact that the bridegroom had wandered from his own world in search of a wife.

It hardly seemed likely that Cristine would make her appearance that night; but almost before the guests filed in stately fashion into the great dining-room, and just as Mrs. Bruce began to speculate vexedly as to the cause of her daughter's absence, Cristine herself entered and took her place, just facing Nora, as quietly as though nothing had happened.

Meeting her step-sister's anxious glance across the intervening flower and fern barrier, she smiled a strange uncomfortable smile. Her eyes had an odd wild brightness, her cheeks had such a warm flush as few had seen them wear. The hot glow came and went as she chatted recklessly with her neighbor, who regarded her more than once with mingled astonishment and admiration, and confided to a friend in the course of the evening that he did not know "that little doll of a Singleton" had so much go in her.

But her mother noticed that she ate nothing, and drank champagne with a sort of feverish thirst.

Nora saw little of her through the evening, though somehow her movements had a strange fascination for her. She followed the slender pink-robed form as it moved restlessly abont the large rooms, into and out of the conservatory, never staying long in one spot, and never by any chance approaching her. She hardly listened to Lord de Gretton's murmured chat, or the gentle buzz of conversation that went on around; the question perplexed her—was Cristine avoiding her or not?

If she was, she changed her plan at the last moment. As Nora sat in her room, alone at last, resting her hot head against the sash of the window, and looking up with aching wistful eyes at the serene splendor of the starlight midnight sky, the door opened, and Cristine, looking very weird and ghostlike in her long white wrapper, came in.

The other looked around as she set her small silver hand-lamp down upon the table, and, even in the self-absorption of her wretched thoughts, noticed how strangely haggard was her aspect.

They were all, with the exception of Cristine, "damsels of high degree," chosen from the circle af Lord de Gretton's friends, knowing nothing of and caring nothing for the bride, and secretly resenting the fact that the bridegroom had wandered from his own world in search of a wife.

Rich, still agreeable, and eligible in every way, he had been comparatively left alone by chaperons and passed over by prudent parents becanse by common consent every one had given him to Lady Olivia Blake; and Lady Olivia herself was not more angry and indignant when she discovered the sorry part she had been made to play than was "Society" in realising the trick played upon it. "Society" and Lady Olivia however had, with excellent world-wisdom, determined to pocket the affront and countenance the ceremony. The former thronged the church in the persons of its most charming and sharp-tongued representatives. The latter, gorgeous in a costume of olive-green, stamped velvet, and satin that suited her dark beauty to perfection, stood tranquilly conscious of the thousand eager eyes that watched her with malicious interest, almost on the altar-steps, almost by the bridgegroom's side, accepting the situation with a fierce defiant pride that moved those who knew her story best to a sort of admiring sympathy.

"How well she bears it!" the gossips whispered to one another behind their ivory-and-velvet prayer-books. "He treated her shamefully—quite shamefully, you know. She actually wore the diamonds at the palace ball. Yes, the bride has them on now. Quite shocking, I call it—so much worse than if she were a girl—for a woman of Olivia's age ridicule is death. Yet really, you know, it is wonderful. She looks quite handsome to-day—does she not?"

"Yes, the bride does not shine by comparison, young as she is—a poor lifeless looking thing, I call her. Are her people at all presentable, by-the-way?"

"There they are!" the first speaker said, nodding her head in the direction of Captain and Mrs. Bruce. "Do you see—a stout over-dressed women in garnet silk and white lace, who looks absurdly important and pleased with herself and surroundings, and a thin white-haired man, who does not seem to share her feelings? He is something in the Navy, or Coast-guard. They were quite awfully poor, I hear, and I dare say compassed heaven and earth to ensare De Gretton!"

So, in its accustomed charitable fashion, "Society" gossiped and speculated while the solemn words were spoken, while the soft sweet music floated through the church, while Nora Bruce knelt beside the man from whom she shrank with an hourly-increasing intensity of repugnance,

Nora saw little of her through the evening, though somehow her movements had a strange fascination for her. She followed the slender pink-robed form as it moved restlessly abont the large rooms, into and out of the conservatory, never staying long in one spot, and never by any chance approaching her. She hardly listened to Lord de Gretton's murmured chat, or the gentle buzz of conversation that went on around; the question perplexed her—was Cristine avoiding her or not?

If she was, she changed her plan at the last moment. As Nora sat in her room, alone at last, resting her hot head against the sash of the window, and looking up with aching wistful eyes at the serene splendor of the starlight midnight sky, the door opened, and Cristine, looking very weird and ghostlike in her long white wrapper, came in.

The other looked around as she set her small silver hand-lamp down upon the table, and, even in the self-absorption of her wretched thoughts, noticed how strangely haggard was her aspect.

"Cristine, you are ill again!" she cried; but Cristine laughed and shoo her head impatiently.

"Cannot you forget that foolish momentary weakness? I never was better in my life. But enough of me. I may not see you much to-morrow, Nora; so I cannot take your directions now. Is there any one you have forgotten, any one for whom you would like to leave a remembrance when you are gone?"

The wild light eyes seemed to burn into the pale bride's face; sho stirred restlessly under the cruel persistent gaze.

"No one; there is nothing," Nora said shortly. "Oh, by-the-way, Cristine, did not the girl bring a note for me just before dinner?"

She asked the question indifferently enough, grasping at any pretext for a change of subject and caring little what the answer might be. But Cristine drew in her breath with a sharp little cry, and pushed the fair fluffy hair back from her forehead with a tragic gesture of despair.

"Really, I am unpardonable, Nora; I remember it all now. It was a message from Madame Josephine, something about the arrangement of your train, I think; but I was taken ill just at the moment, and——"

"Never mind, Cristine; what does it matter?" the other said wearily. "The train will do very well as it is."

"But I must have thrown the note down either in my room or the corridor," Cristine persisted, knitting her light brows in extreme perplexity. "I will search for it and find it before I go to bed."

"You will do nothing of the kind," Nora cried peremptorily, for, besides, being selfishly anxious for solitude, she was really shocked by the worn, aged look of her step-sister's face and the ivory-and-velvet prayer-books. "He treated her shamefully—quite shamefully, you know. She actually wore the diamonds at the palace ball. Yes, the bride has them on now. Quite shocking, I call it—so much worse than if she were a girl—for a woman of Olivia's age ridicule is death. Yet really, you know, it is wonderful. She looks quite handsome to-day—does she not?"

"Yes, the bride does not shine by comparison, young as she is—a poor lifeless looking thing, I call her. Are her people at all presentable, by-the-way?"

"There they are!" the first speaker said, nodding her head in the direction of Captain and Mrs. Bruce. "Do you see—a stout over-dressed women in garnet silk and white lace, who looks absurdly important and pleased wi(h herself and surroundings, and a thin white-haired man, who does not seem to share her feelings? He is something in the Navy, or Coast-guard. They were quite awfully poor, I hear, and I dare say compassed heaven and earth to ensare De Gretton!"

So, in its accustomed charitable fashion, "Society" gossiped and speculated while the solemn words were spoken, while the soft sweet music floated through the church, while Nora Bruce knelt beside the man from whom she shrank with an hourly-increasing intensity of repugnance, and heard, with a deathly faintness at her heart, the priest's calm tones pronounce them man and wife.

"Those whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder!"

Like one in a trance the girl listened to the words so full of solemn and awful meaning—so mystically sweet to those who hear them with mutual love and trust, so terrible to those who seal a loveless bond and know that hope and freedom may be theirs never more.

It was her death sentence, Nora thought, glancing wildly around her. Some one was murdered,—was it Arthur Beaupre?—and she was here to answer for the crime. It was not a church, but a grim guilt-stained court in which she stood. It was not a silver-tongued and fashionable priest lisping forth the marriage blessing, but a judge who was sentencing her to die!

To die! When? To-day—to-morrow? Ah, well, that mattered little. It was easy, so easy to die; and after death there would come peace and rest, and—yes, if Heaven were merciful—the touch of Arthur's hand, the glad forgiveness of Arthur's kind blue eyes. He might forgive her then—for, even though she were the guilty crime-stained wretch they called her, though she left this world that had been too hard for her through the dark portal of a shameful death, she would still be true to him.

The girl's brain reeled with the delirious fancy, her gray eyes flashed through the rich lace of her veil with a light so insanely happy that Cristine, who stood close behind her with her gloves and bouquet, felt a thrill of positive terror, and bent forward with a warning touch.

"Nora!" she cried in a sharp whisper; and with a little shiver the miserable bride came back to life and memory.

The wedding-march sounded as the bridal-party came back from the vestry; the eager sightseers parted right and left to let the gay procession pass down the central aisle, through the tall gray gates, and down the red-carpeted steps. Lord de Gretton, with his bride upon his arm, came first; and he carried his well-shaped gray head erect, with a gallant grace that well became him—so the on-lookers declared.

Perhaps it was well he did so. It would neither have swelled his triumph nor sweetened his temper to look on the dazed hopeless misery of the face and dark anguished eyes beneath the Brussels veil and orange-blossom wreath. Strangely enough, however, the happy bridegroom was at that moment thinking less of his bride than of the handsome dark-eyed woman whose strange tranquility of look had in some queer fashion shaken his nerves and annoyed him.

Destruction of Russian Forests.

The constantly increasing destruction of Russian forests is naturally discussed with much interest by Russian papers. In the last hundred years the forest area of Russia has diminished from 11 per cent. in Twer to 46 per cent. in Riazan. The beautiful oak forests are becoming extinct. Of the celebrated chestnut woods of Vassilsoursk, which date from the time of Peter the Great, only the borders exist at present, while all the interior is ravaged. The extensive forests on the banks of Volga and Don, which once reached far into the steppes toward the Ural mountain, are now destroyed and so many millions of trees have been felled in the interior of Russia that wood is becoming scarce in many provinces. The destruction is carried on very systematically; but, before long, it will of needs come to an end, if the enormous consumption of firewood is not energetically stopped. Considering the amount of fuel required for Russian railways, steamers, and factories, it is not surprising that, during the last twenty years, the aspect of the wooded country has greatly changed. Wood, however, is becoming more expensive, and the importation of coal is being seriously considered by large consumers, while petroleum offered a third alternative of daily increasing popularity.

A new weekly journal is being established in Montreal, with the noted Capt. Kerwin as editor. It is called the Pilot.

The flouring mills of Moore & Son, of Walkerton, have been destroyed by fire, together with 600 bushels of wheat and a quantity of flour.

A great railway strike of the engineers took place in Manitoba. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers repudiate all responsibility of it.

The Department of Agriculture has forwarded several cases of immigration literature to England for distribution by the Government agent there.

Several ladies recently applied for the privilege of attending lectures at the University College, but the former decision to exclude them has been re-affirmed by the Senate.

Mr. Isaac Powley, a farmer of Kingston township, was killed at the Cataraqui railway crossing. His remains were carried on the front of the engine to the Kingston station, two miles distant.

Mrs. George Myers, of Thurlow, while preparing breakfast a few mornings ago, had her dress ignited by a spark from the stove, and narrowly escaped with her life. Her husband had his hands very badly burned in putting the fire out.

Sir Leonard Tilley was waited on the other day in Toronto by those interested in establishing large iron smelting and steel works in that city. They wanted a bonus of seven dollars per ton on the iron produced. He promised to give the matter his best consideration.

The plans for the new ice palace for the Montreal carnival are now ready. The building will be entirely of ice, consisting of 10,000 blocks, of 40x20 inches square each. The palace will be 160 feet long and 65 feet at its greatest depth. There will be a main tower 76 feet high. The total cost is estimated at $3,000.

Alexander Patterson, of Belleville, was going from his home to a fire company meeting last week with $300 in his possession to pay the company, from the corporation. He was knocked down and senseless in the street and his pockets rifled, but the $300 was in an inside pocket and not obtained. He thinks he knows his assailant.

Women as Lawyears.

Women are applying everywhere in the United States for full admission in the courts as lawyers. One was refused the other day in Pennsylvania, but in several of the other States they do not experience any such difficulty. The Bar of Canada may well become alarmed. Women will soon be knocking at the door here, as well. They have already forced open the doors of the Medical Profession, and the Legal cannot resist them when the siege begins in dead earnest. That will be an evil day for the lawyers. Let women once get an even start in the Courts, and where will the men come out? In three-fourths of the cases of contention now, women carry the day, and in "courting" the conquest is almost invariably on her side. Few men can resist her "pleadings, even in their present non-professional shape, and how much more becoming the silk gowns will look on their shoulders! And where will a man stand among those he desires as clients and customers when it comes to "getting out an attachment?" The outlook is decidedly bad for the lawyers, but there is no use resisting fate. The woman's hour has struck.

An Obstinate Wife.

The other night a policeman who was patrolling High street east heard a whistle blown, followed by shouts for "police!" and after a run of half a block he came to a halt in front of a house where a second-story window was raised and a man had half his length over the sill.

"What's the row?" demanded the officer.

"Some purglars vhas in mein house!" was the answer.

Her husband had his hands very badly burned in putting the fire out.

Mrs. Taylor is now in her 107th year, and is still healthy. In her appearance she would be placed in the sixties. Nor have the effects of a prolonged life shown any marks on her excellent memory or general habits.

UNITED STATES.

A woman, Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, recently applied for permission to practice in the Common Pleas Court at Philadelphia. Judge Hare refused permission, as he deemed it contrary to the spirit of the present laws of Pennsylvania.

At New a Orleans election Democratic meeting, to nominate candidates to the State Convention, much ill-feeling was shown, which culminated in bloodshed. About fifty pistol shots were fired, and several well-known citizens killed, while a number of others were badly wounded.

A Jewish synagogue in Chicago was entered a few nights ago by some miscreants and nearly all the interior ornamentation and gas fixtures were destroyed. The curtains and gowns were torn to pieces and much other harm done. No special reason is assigned, other than the anti-Jewish feeling rankling in some hearts.

At Fort Smith, Indian Territory, recently, Levi James, the Choctaw Indian convicted last November of the murder of James Fulsom, was shot at Scullyville court-house, in accordance with the Choctaw law. Very Reasonable.

"I am very sorry for you, sir, but my daughter has been brought up to a life of luxury, and I can never allow her to become your wife."

"But you forget. I am a prosperous broker."

"Yes, I know that ; but the markets are very uncertain, and you may be a poor man to-morrow."

"But I own a rolling mill, too."

"So I understand ; but the iron business is subject to great fluctuations."

"And I have three woollen mills, am a member of a jobbing firm, and own a large amount of real estate."

"All of them are uncertain properties. Even real estate is being ruined by high taxes. Have you anything else ?"

"Yes, I own a newspaper."

"Oh, I beg your pardon. Take her, my dear boy. She is yours."

Jefferson left such minute instructions as to the simplicity of any memorial to be set over his grave that, in order to spend five thousand dollars, half the sum appropriated by Congress for the purpose of honoring him, the greater part had to be put into the fence.

About fifty pistol shots were fired, and several well-known citizens killed, while a number of others were badly wounded.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Gladstone is to be honored by the Greeks with a statute in Athens. He is said to be the only living man in whose honor a statute has been erected in a foreign country. A year ago subscriptions were asked for the purpose, and so liberal was the response that twice as much money as is required has already been sent in.

There is little wonder that bee keeping is so much on the increase in Ontario for it is one of the most profitable industries going. The little creatures are not very difficult to manage when people have got into their ways, and the work about them become rather a pleasure than otherwise. In a few years bee farming will be very common. Graping growing also is looking up. There is no reason why there should not be far more of it than there is. The whole of the Niagara peninsula will by and bye be given over to fruit trees and vines.

The Brooklyn Bridge has already got to be re-floored. The story goes that Jay Gould "cornered" all the Georgia pine of the requisite grade in the market, to spite Ex-Mayor Grace, who had the contract ; and it would seem that the latter got even out o he public.

FASHION NOTES.

Trains are fuller.

Trains are not long.

Gloves are very long.

Mask veils are much worn.

Few trained dresses are worn.

Sleeves remain very tight below the elbow.

Dotted face veils are in high fashionable favor.

Gentleman's driving gloves have very large gauntlets.

Jewels are much in favor for the hair at evening parties and balls.

Tan-colored Suede gloves divide favor with white and black gloves for evening wear.

Children's dresses are all made loose about the waist, in the late revived English styles.

Short dresses are much in vogue for evening wear, even when the wearers do not dance.

Gauzy stuffs, tulles, crapes, and silk and Indian muslins are in demand for ball and fancy party dresses.

Tulle spotted or sprigged with silver comes among other gauzy tinsel decorated stuffs for evening wear.

The bodice with a high back and low cut out front is the correct wear for dinner parties and evening receptions.

Sleeves of costumes of ceremony are made tight, but the puffs or epaulette appendages in the armhole or on the shoulders.

The few trained dresses lately brought from the other side have the princess back, under which disappear the high puffed panier draperies.

The most fashionable ornaments for the hair are crescents, stars, strays, and combs of Rhine crystals, often so fine as to be mistaken for diamonds.

Birds and butterflies of the most tropical appearance are placed flat on the corsages and draperies of many gauzy and tinsel-embroidered ball dresses.

Caps of pleated lace, puffs of tulle and gauze and of beaded net are added to the sleeves of high corsages to give the high-shouldered epaulette effect.

Neapolitan jewellery consisting of brooches, lace pins, rings and bangles of silver filligree in all sorts of fanciful forms, such as tambourines, serpents, mandolins, violins, and guitars, are bought eagerly for holiday gifts.

Hints on Butter Making.

At the recent Dairymen's Convention in Quebec, Mr. W. H. Lynch, who is probably the best authority on scientific dairy work in Canada, gave a most instruc-do as well as, and oftener much better than men, if Mrs. Grundy would only keep quiet, and other old ladies in our pulpits and newspapers only stop raising the alarming cry that women are being "unsexed." In Russia women are now being greatly encouraged to apply themselves to watch-making, jewelry, and other such light and skillful occupations. A woman in New York is reported to be making the delicate instruments used by the most skillful surgeons in that city, In other localities women are being looked for in connection with the drug stores.

Let some of our Canadian "rights" men, and women too, give a friendly hand towards opening more widely such doors to women here and a good practical step will be taken, and let them, if need be, clap their hands over the mouth of the next man who raises the "unsex" racket.

Snakes in the Grass.

BY ERNEST J. OLDMEADOW.

Beneath the ample shadow of their waggon
Some lonely emigrants have built their fire;
The flames leap up like some fierce, captive dragon
Which struggles in its ire.

Mother and children peacefully are sleeping
Beside the roaring camp-fire's cheerful glow;
The settler, gun in hand, his watch is keeping
'Gainst wolf and Indian foe

All the hot day he's been alert and wary,
Now he must watch all through the weary night;
And, till the dawn, must scan the rolling prairie,
Patched with the young moon's light.

How chill the moonbeams are! How sad and dreary
The drowsy waters mid the rushes weep;
He lets his tired eyes close, with watching weary,
Lies down—and falls asleep!

The pale moon's beams upon the plain are lying,
A gentle murmur rises from the rill;
The night wind through the swaying grass is sighing,
And all things else are still.

Is it the night wind sighing in the grasses?
Is it the wind which makes them bend and shake?
Ah, no! Into the moonlit space there passes
A coiling rattlesnake!

It sees the watchman sleeping at his station,
And glides along with fiercely flaming gaze,
Its eyes reflect in dreadful concentration
The roaring camp fire's blaze.

Hints on Butter Making.

At the recent Dairymen's Convention in Quebec, Mr. W. H. Lynch, who is probably the best authority on scientific dairy work in Canada, gave a most instructive address on the subject, of which the following is a brief resume :—Mr. Lynch in the course of his remarks said a dry goods firm, at great expense, brought out Professor Sheldons with an English dairy, to attend the last Dominion Exhibition at St. John, N.B., and purely for an advertisement of their business. This fact was proof enough, if any were wanted, of the great need for something being done to improve the dairy industry. The bringing out of Professor Sheldon had the effect of satisfying the people of Canada, there represented, that nothing they could send us from England is calculated to help us : it also had the effect of drawing attention to the simple utensils before the meeting that had been exhibited so long as two years ago in the Lower Provinces, and which are now endorsed by authorities, Canadian, American and English, and have been sometimes in successful operation in parts of the Eastern Townships. He explained that he occupied a different position from the other authorities. Butter making hitherto has been a matter of experience, judgment and manual skill. It was a coy art, hard to catch and not easy to hold. The object of the speaker had been to make this useful art a matter, not so much of manual skill, as of mechanical aids. In this he believed he could demonstrate that he had succeeded. Butter-making was essentially a mechanical process, and it was by taking advantage of that fact that he accomplished what had been done. It was a strong point gained that which improved implements and taking advantage of what the farmer already knows of the subject, one day was enough to place an outfit in successful working hands of the average farmer, and thus practically place a model dairy in all the farm-houses of the country. Here he proceeded to illustrate how all through the process the essentials of the successful prosecution of the art were involved in simple, cheap mechanical appliances. For instance, water was utilized instead of air to separate the cream, its many advantages, as pointed out, lying in the fact that it is available at a less variable temperature than air and is a better conductor of heat. In the construction of the churn were involved the important points of saving the grain and the complete separation of the caseine from the butter. One of the most striking features of this, the new and scientific process, was the use of a granulated butter holder, by means of which

In the construction of the churn were involved the important points of saving the grain and the complete separation of the caseine from the butter. One of the most striking features of this, the new and scientific process, was the use of a granulated butter holder, by means of which small dairies could make full packages of butter at each packing, and so secure the advantage hitherto peculiar to the large dairy or creamery. The novelties of a strainer milking pail and an air-tight tub were explained, and shown to form an important part of his interesting, simple and valuable outfit, that is apparently enough almost to revolutionize the dairy industry. He spoke also strongly of the importance of quality in butter, especially from an economic point of view. Mr. Lynch was frequently applauded during the course of his interesting address, which absorbed all the morning session.

The Woman Question.

The "Woman question" is not likely to be such a difficult problem in the future as many wise men feared it would. "What shall we do with all the women?" some philosophers used to discuss with very great earnestness. What shall the women do for themselves, is, after all, the most sensible and most important. The best thing and the wisest thing to do is simply to open up to women the various branches of industry to which she is well adapted, and in doing this there is not much else required. There are hundreds and hundreds of things that women can

New openings are to be made soon in France for women. The Government have decided to throw open the posts of railway station masters to them. In many parts of the United States and Canada women are now employed in the telegraph and ticket offices at the railways, and they are doing their work well. THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company's Produce Exhibition Car.

A Conservatory on Wheels—The Energy and Enterprise of a Western Railway Which Sends Dakota's Products on an Exhibition Tour.

One of the most notable but quiet enterprises for advertising purposes which any state or railroad can boast of, has been quietly going on in the midst of our Ontario farmers. The Milwaukee and St. Paul railway company, conceiving the idea that the best way to surmount the reports of hard winters, blizzards and small crops, was to exhibit to the farmers (the class mostly interested) some of the many products which are the pride of

THE STATE OF DAKOTA.

This vast territory contains 150,932 square miles or 96,500,000 of acres of the best farming land to be found in North America. It is situated between the 42nd and 49th degrees of north latitude and the 19th and 29th degrees of longitude west of Washington. The extent of this state is more than France and twice as large as Great Britain and Ireland. That this territory has the most unbounded resources could easily be seen, if space would admit of the enumeration of its mineral resources, and as well as from the annual report of its products from all sources. Those figures although correct, could not convince any person more plainly than the exhibit made in the fine large car of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway company, which is now visiting (for the benefit of farmers) the various towns and cities in Ontario. A brief description of this elegant may not be out of place.

Upon entering the car from either end, one cannot help feeling he has suddenly entered a conservatory arrayed in the most artistic manner, wreaths of corn, wheat, tobacco leaf and many grains and grasses, are woven and interwoven around roof and sides, in a thorough and artistic manner, bouquets of all styles made from earth's fruits are scattered around most profusely, until one can scarcely believe he is not attending the exhibit of a French school of vegetable cookery, preparatory to the cooking process. One of the most notable ornaments in the car is a large bell hung in the centre of the car the lower part of which is made of wheat, corn rye, grasses, etc., and the upper part of corn and vegetables, for a clapper or hammer, a fine clapper-shaped squash is hung in the centre by a blue ribbon, under this bell a prize in money will be given to the loving couple who will join in the bonds of matrimony.

The increase in population in one year, from 1881 to 1882, was 43,354. With such an increase in population any person would think the answer to all false reports a pretty plain one, for not only has the population of Dakota increased but it is found that under the liberal homestead and other laws of the United States its "free lands" are rapidly being disposed of. The report shows that of 15,669,848 acres of public lands entered under the various acts during the period above mentioned, not less than 4,568,919 acres or nearly one-third were disposed of in Dakota alone. Of the total acreage of 6,347,729, entered under the homestead act in twenty-four states and territories 2,187,415, or more than one third was taken up in Dakota, and that under the timber act more than one-half of the 2,609,797 acres disposed of were entered in this territory. The rapid growth of this territory is mainly due to the energy, enterprise and business push of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Co., which has run its rails in all directions through the territory, and which does not hesitate to run forty and fifty miles of a branch track when accommodation is wanted. Particularly is this noticed at Roscoe. The company has a regular emigration bureau attached to its service, and keeps regular travelling agents to attend to the wants of emigrants alone. No person not employed by the company is allowed in or around the company's emigration offices or railroads, and its system of detectives very soon ferret out any persons desirous of playing tricks upon emigrants. Mitchell and Aberdeen are the two great headquarters for the emigrants where the company's offices are situated. The company's produce exhibition car has been in Ontario under the direct supervision of M. H. Mercer of the emigration department of the road and Mr. Wallace Heafford, Canadian passenger agent of the company.—Toronto World, t 27th, 1883.

looking cotton wood tree, about 20 feet long, attracts unusual attention; it was planted two years ago from a slip, and is now 3½ inches in diameter, which clearly shows the speed with which a young plant will quietly increase in value. Some very fine samples of timber grown from seed are displayed in many varieties, including soft maple, box elder, white ash, cotton wood, and apple, samples of Okra, Martinua, hops, parsnips, and cucumbers of two varieties.

THE GRAIN DISPLAY

is particularly fine, both in sheaves and bottles, and many varieties are shown, particularly the Dakota, No. 1 hard, Mediterranean Spring, and other early wheat grown around Yankton are very conspicuous. Both black and white oats are displayed, and among the latter are some exceedingly fine samples of White Russian, Flax seed, buckwheat, rye, barley, peas and berries can be found in another department, and also samples of fine, white flour from Chamberlain and ground at the mills of J. F. Sisson & Co. Sorghum or sugar cane and broom corn of great length decorate the roof of the car, and are interwoven with small sheafs of wheat cut at full length. On the bottom of the car are some very fine samples of Sioux Falls granite. The stone is compact and polishes to a high degree and is used in the erection of the finest structures at St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn. The finest class of stone for art work in the collection is the conglomerated stone which once polished for table tops, mantlepieces, etc, would become the rage rapidly. The stone from which Indians make their pipes is also shown, and as a curiosity the autograph of the noted Sitting Bull, written in a plain school boy hand, also a handsome and curious walking cane cut on the Missouri river is one of the greatest of curiosities.

CLIMATE, STORMS AND RAINS.

So much has been said in respect to the blizzards and heavy storms that are claimed for Dakota that a few statistics will not be amiss, and the reader should bear in mind that on account of the vastness of the territory a great difference will be found to exist between the region north of the 47th parallel and that south of it. In southeastern Dakota, the climate in many respects resembles that of Indiana, Ohio, Iowa and southern Minnesota, with a greater number of sunny, and a less number of rainy days. The summers are agreeable, and little inconvenience is experienced from heat, owing to the prairie breezes which prevail during the warmer months. The fir is pure and dry in summer, clear and bracing in winter, and affords remarkable relief to persons suffering from incipient consumption, etc. Malarial diseases are wholly unknown. The winters are not severe, and the climate during the whole year compares more than favorably with the states before mentioned. From the tabulated statement of the signal office at Washington for a period covering 87 years, it is found that not a single cyclone has touched this territory whilst other states and territories have suffered 600 tornadoes, particularly in Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio and Indiana. That this territory has become a favored one for farming there is no doubt, and that Canadians have found it particularly so will be shown by the following returns made in 1880:

"We are going to have a mild winter, Mrs. Varley; every body says so," remarked Mrs. Seaton. Mrs. Varley merely acknowleged the information with an "Ah," but when Mrs. Seaton had gone she turned to her companion and said: "You know what that remark means, don't you? Her husband's too stingy to buy her a new set of furs."

Of all the actions af a man's life, his marriage least concerns other people; yet, of all actions of his life, it is most meddled with by other people.

During the thick fog the other evening Gom Gom took a poor blind man by the hand and led him to his door. Telling the story to a friend on the following day, he cried:—"It is terrible to be blind in such a fog."

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

Deputations were appointed and a vigorous canvass is to be made at once.

Isaac Powley, Cataraqui, recently killed on the Grand Trunk Railway, was a peculiar man. He made considerable money, but never invested it, and generally hid it in outlandish places. He told one person that he had bored a hole in the ratter of his barn and put his cash into it. To another he hinted that a pail of money was buried in a field. The members of his family have not been informed of these hiding places, consequently are now unable to find the money.

The Sunday School entertainment on Tuesday evening in the M. E. Church of this town was the most successful held for years. There were fully five hundred present, including the Sabbath School children. A very carefully prepared programme was first presented. Mr. H. V. Fralick, superintendent of the school, presided, supported by the pastor and Rev. Mr. Young. After the conclusion of the admirable programme refreshments were served in the basement. We congratulate the church on the success of their entertainment.

—On Friday morning last the tender and a box car loaded with ties went off the Napanee & Tamworth RR. at Yarker, tearing up the track for about 50 feet. The tender and the car were damaged. The accident took place at a cattle pass half a mile from Yarker, in passing over which it is supposed the tender broke and spread the track. The fireman had a narrow escape. He was on the tender and was thrown into the ditch. The tender caught one corner of the box car, which kept it from falling upon him. The engine belonged to the Grand Trunk and the box car to the Great Western.

☞ IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—Dr. McCullough, the celebrated European and American Physician, so famed for his unrivalled success in the treatment and cure of all chronic and lingering diseases, will visit Napanee, professionally, and may be consulted at the Huffman House from Friday, January the 11th, to Thursday, January the 17th, 1884. New Readers.

Teachers are advised to delay in introducing new readers, as the Minister of Education is considering the desirability of having only one series.

Paying for a Stolen Ride.

Summonses were yesterday issued by the Mayor upon the application of Mr. M. C. Row, contractor, N., T. & Q. Railway, against Jonn Lowry, David Lowry, Wm. Holmes, Eli Fry, L. Fox, Jacob Detlor and Walter Cook, all of Newburgh, for having entered upon the premises of the Railway Company on Christmas night and placing the hand-car on the track running it to Clark's Mills. They broke several parts of the car and left it in a demoralized state. Mr. Row is determined to put a stop to these depredations and will therefore make an example of these parties. The young men will find tampering with railway cars a very serious matter.

A Successful Dramatic Entertainment.

A large and fashionable audience greeted the presentation of Sterling Coyne's pretty comedy, "Checkmate," by the dramatic branch of the English Church Union, in the new Opera House, Friday evening last. The piece was elegantly put on and the acting was of a high order. A stranger would hardly have recognized the company as amateurs their playing being up to the average "professional." The wardrobes of the ladies were in exquisite taste and the scenic effects all that could be desired. Mrs. J. E. Herring as Mrs. Featherly, the devoted but injured wife, gave an all but perfect representation of the character and won the unanimous approval of the audience; Mrs. E. S. D. Stevenson, as Mrs. Swandown, successfully assumed the character of the fascinating and designing widow, with charming piquancy; while Mrs. W. K. Pruyn's Mrs. Major De Boots, the strong-minded female who ruled both De Boots and his home with an iron will, was a faithful rendition of a somewhat difficult part. Mr. J. S. Robinson, in the role of Mr. Featherly, everybody's friend, was not at his best, but still he left little wanting in his representation. Napanee audiences have seen him do much better. To Mr. Frank Hamilton, as usual, fell the lot to provoke the laughter of the audience and this he was eminently successful in doing as as Major Wellington DeBoots, the would-be brave militia officer. Mr. James L. Herring, as Mr. Icebrook, the bashful lover, sustained the part most creditably. Master George Stevenson took the character of Fanny, the house maid, and a most bewitchsumed the character of the fascinating and designing widow, with charming piquancy; while Mrs. W. K. Robinson, in the role of Mr. Featherly, everybody's friend, was not at his best, but still he left little wanting in his representation. Napanee audiences have seen him do much better. To Mr. Frank Hamilton, as usual, fell the lot to provoke the laughter of the audience and this he was eminently successful in doing as as Major Wellington DeBoots, the would-be brave militia officer. Mr. James L. Herring, as Mr. Icebrook, the bashful lover, sustained the part most creditably. Master George Stevenson took the character of Fanny, the house maid, and a most bewitching little girl he made. His was a most successful rendition, as was also that of Master J. F. Robinson's Trap. The entire audience was delighted and the hope was expressed that the Union would at an early date provide a bill of entertainment equally as good. The proceeds amounted to about $150.

Concert and Presentation of Colors.

The new Opera House was only half filled Saturday evening at the Saved Army concert. This was disappointing to the committee who had at considerable expense provided an especially good bill of entertainment. The proceeds lacked $5 of the expenses. But the people who turned out enjoyed the entertainment all the same. The opening exercises were conducted by Capt. Atkins, after which Mr. Dennis Daly was called to the chair and delivered an appropriate address. The cornet band played an opening selection in excellent style and were frequent contributors during the evening. The programme consisted of singing by Miss Burton of Kingston, her rendition of "Where is Heaven?" being especially fine; Mesdames Mills and Garbut, Misses Briggs, Blair, Burton, Cook, McBean, and Mr. F. Tilley; an appropriate temperance reading by Mr. W. J. Black; addresses by Revs. Pearson and Card and Mayor James. The presentation of colors to the Napanee corps, No. 6, took place after the first part. The presentation was made by Capt. Aitkens of Cobourg in an appropriate speech and the banner was accepted by Lieuts. Lee and Ely on behalf of the corps, the whole company singing "We will Rally Round the Banner." The banner is of red with gold letters. A large cross in the centre is surmounted by a scroll bearing the words, "Victory or Death," and on each side are the letters "S" "A." Near the top on each side are the date of presentation and the No. of the corps. At the base of the cross are the words, "Jesus Bore the Cross for Me," and a scroll at the bottom reads, "We will Fight for the Lord Everywhere." The banner is carried by the corps at their outdoor parades. The concert was very enjoyable. It is to be hoped the Army's next effort in this direction will be more successful financially.

The Y. P. M. & L. Society.

This society, which has become one of the institutions of the town, held its regular meeting last Friday evening. There was a good attendance, the recitations, reading and musical performance were of a high order. The chair was occupied by Mr. Steward Daly, who discharged the duties of the office in a most creditable manner. The receipts were the largest taken this —To-day the Midland Railway passed into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway, which corporation takes possession and control of that road.

—Last night a man named Lee, a carter, with his horse was drowned at the foot of Barrack street, Kingston, while intoxicated. He seems to have driven upon the ice, over the ragged edge of which the animal and its driver passed to death. The head of the horse was seen under the water by a skater, and this afternoon the body of the unfortunate man was grappled for and recovered. This was the third occasion upon which Lee drove into the water.

We, the members of the Quarterly Conference of the Bay Circuit, in conference assembled, desire to express our regret that our pastor, the Rev. L. A. Betts, is still confined to his home.

It was unanimously resolved to assure him that his salary should be paid in full and that the work, as far as possible, should be kept up. And we pray for his speedy recovery and restoration to his work and family.

By order of the Quarterly Conference.

MRS. ELIZABETH MASON—Dr. M. Souvielle & Co.: Gentlemen—Yours of last week to hand, and in reply to your enquiry I have much pleasure in stating that from the first time of using the spirometer and the medicine I have improved very much. The only members absent were Mr. Leonard Wagar, Reeve, and Mr. Brown, Deputy Reeve of Sheffield.

THE CLERK called the Council to order and asked the members to elect a Warden, which, upon motion, was proceeded with, by ballot, Messrs. W. F. Hall and F. Burrows assisting in the count.

Before the vote was taken Mr. Files announced that he was not a candidate for the Wardenship.

The ballot resulted as follows: B. C. Lloyd 12; R. S. Dennison, 4; John Sharp, 2; Capt. Polly, 1.—19.

THE CLERK announced Mr. Lloyd duly elected and he was escorted to the chair by Mr. Dennison and the oath of office was administered by His Honor Judge Wilkison.

Messrs. Wagar and Brown entered and took their seats.

THE WARDEN then addressed the Council returning thanks for the honor conferred upon him, which he considered was enhanced by a provision of the McCarthy Act which constitutes him a member of the Board of License Commissioners. He pointed out that it would be necessary to provide for $40,000 debentures which are nearly due—$20,000 in August and $20,000 in February of next year. It would be necessary to float new debentures to retire the old. In conclusion, he suggested that the Council make their appropriations at this session and ob-pairs to Court House and gaol, $6 67; A. W. Grange, sundries, $15.63; J. W. George, to pay carter for drawing wood, 45c.—All referred to the Committee on County Property.

Moved by Mr. Perry, seconded by Mr. Parks, that as the Council have determined to hold a meeting in March, that the salary of councillors be reduced to $2 per day.

Considerable discussion arose as to the advisability of reducing the indemnity, in which a general opinion was expressed that $2 a day was not sufficient to pay the expenses of members while here, especially those from a distance. Some, however, maintained that $3 a day was too much, and as a growing opinion was prevalent among almost all the ratepayers of the county that the councillors were getting extravagant they thought it advisable to reduce the pay. In the midst of the discussion a motion was made to adjourn till 2 p. m., which was carried.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Council resumed at 2 p. m. pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. SEXSMITH presented the first report of the Committee on Roads and Bridges, which recommended that on the account of Mr. Cornelius Carroll for damage to his mare on the county road back of Selby, amounting to $130, the sum of $108 be granted, and in case that sum is refused, that a defence be entered in court. After a lengthy discussion the report was adopted.

Messrs. Henwood, Gibbard and Wallace, members of the Street Committee of Napanee Council appeared as a deputation. Mr. Henwood, chairman, stated that the swing bridge was in such a bad condition that it was necessary to have a new structure. The bridge had been repaired from year to year until it was almost composed of patches, and last year it had nearly been carried away by the spring freshet, and it was doubtful if it would stand much longer. It could be rebuilt for from $800 to $1,000, and as the bridge was as much used by the people of the country as the town people, he asked a liberal appropriation towards its reconstruction.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

A communication was read from Mr. Sheriff Pruyn, stating that his private office had never been furnished. When he wanted to take a person to his private office he had to take them into a room without even a chair. After having served eighteen years he thought he was not asking too much of the council to furnish it—Referred to the Committee on County Property.

Moved by Mr. Perry, seconded by Mr. Parks, that there be no session of this Council until the month of June.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Reid, seconded by Mr. Sexsmith that whereas, there is a difference of opinion as to the advisability of doing away with the March session, and as debentures are due, amounting to $40,000, which will have to be provided for, that the matter be referred to the Warden and the Finance Committee to call a March session, if they think it advisable.

Moved in amendment to the amendment by Mr. Polly seconded by Mr. Wilson, that the March session be held, in consequence of the large amount of debentures due and to be provided for.

Mr. Wilson said that the money would have to be provided and some of the debentures would have to be sold by June, and in order to deal more fully with such an important question he thought it would not be proper to do away with the session.

Mr. REID was satisfied to leave the matter in the hands of the Warden and the Finance Committee. He thought they were capable of judging what action was best.

Mr. POLLY spoke in favor of holding the March session on account of the importance of the matter of debentures and he thought

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Council resumed at 2 p. m, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. SEXSMITH presented the first report of the Committee on Roads and Bridges, which recommended that on the account of Mr. Cornelius Carroll for damage to his mare on the county road back of Selby, amounting to $130, the sum of $108 be granted, and in case that sum is refused, that a defence be entered in court. After a lengthy discussion the report was adopted.

Messrs. Henwood, Gibbard and Wallace, members of the Street Committee of Napanee Council appeared as a deputation. Mr. Henwood, chairman, stated that the swing bridge was in such a bad condition that it was necessary to have a new structure. The bridge had been repaired from year to year until it was almost composed of patches, and last year it had nearly been carried away by the spring freshet, and it was doubtful if it would stand much longer. It could be rebuilt for from $800 to $1,000, and as the bridge was as much used by the people of the country as the townspeople, he asked a liberal appropriation towards its reconstruction.

Messrs. Gibbard and Wallace also made some remarks which were in substance the same as what Mr. Henwood had said.

Chief Allen stated that the bridge had cost the town from $100 to $300 each year to keep it in repair, and it was necessary to have a new bridge. In answer to an enquiry as to the original cost of the bridge he said that it was built by subscription, and as much of the timber was given by private persons he could not tell how much it cost. The contractor received $1,400 for his work.

Mr. PARKES moved, seconded by Mr. WILSON, that the matter be referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.—Carried.

The Reeve of Adolphustown brought in the report of the special road money expended in that township for the year, amounting to $139.43.—Referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

The WARDEN stated that he had a petition from Napanee Town Council with reference to a home for the poor, which was referred at the December session to a committee composed of Messrs. Lloyd, Doller, Herring and T. G. Carscallen, but the committee had had no time to attend to it. He placed it before the Council to do with it as they wished.—Filed.

Moved by Mr. BALL, seconded by Mr. DIAMOND, that the Treaurer be requested to report the amount of money on hand, and the uncollected taxes and any other arrears.—Carried.

on was read from Cornelius Car- is a difference of opinion as to the advisability of doing away with the March session, and as debentures are due, amounting to $40,000, which will have to be provided for, that the matter be referred to the Warden and the Finance Committee to call a March session, if they think it advisable.

Moved in amendment to the amendment by Mr. Polly seconded by Mr. Wilson, that the March session be held, in consequence of the large amount of debentures due and to be provided for.

Mr. Wilson said that the money would have to be provided and some of the debentures would have to be sold by June, and in order to deal more fully with such an important question he thought it would not be proper to do away with the session.

Mr. REID was satisfied to leave the matter in the hands of the Warden and the Finance Committee. He thought they were capable of judging what action was best.

Mr. POLLY spoke in favor of holding the March session on account of the importance of the matter of debentures and he thought the council might lose more by not holding the session than the cost of holding it would amount to.

Mr. PARKS thought that nothing would be lost by doing away with the March session. The committee would not have time before the March session to properly prepare the report and much more might be lost by doing it in a hurry, and they should be given till June.

Mr. SHARP said there was no need of the March session. There were intelligent men on the Finance Committee and they would have time to inquire into the matter before the June session. The expense of the session was utter waste. He did not want the county to lose any money by the debentures, but he thought the session could be dispensed with without loss.

Mr. WILSON said the cost would not amount to much. It was not necessary for the council meeting to last four days. They could shorten it if there was no business. He thought the councillors did not come to Napanee to have a good time. They all did it in the public interest. It was for no personal ends that he wished to have the Council meet.

Several other members spoke, and the majority were in favor of having a March session, owing to the important business to be transacted.

The amendment to the amendment was then put and declared carried, and on the yeas and nays being called for it was again carried, on the following division:—Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Bosleay, Carscallen, J. C., Carscallen, T. G., Davis, Diamond, Files, Johnston, Lane, Lloyd, Mallory, Polly, Wilson. Nays—Messrs. Brown, Perry, Parks, Reid, Sexsmith, Sharp, Wagar.

Moved by Mr. Ball, seconded by Mr. Diamond, that this council do not recognize any motion not made in writing, except motions for the adoption of reports and adjournment.

Mr. WILSON read over the printed rules of the Council which covered the motion made by Mr. Ball. Mr. Ball then withdrew his motion.

A number of accounts was presented as follows:—Robert Light, repairs to Court House and gaol, $5,90; Hinch Bros., sundries, $8.38; Mr. Roberts, cutting wood and other work, $7.00; T. H. Waller, re- had no time to attend to it. He placed it before the Council to do with it as they wished.—Filed.

Moved by Mr. BALL, seconded by Mr. DIAMOND, that the Treasurer be requested to report the amount of money on hand, and the uncollected taxes and any other arrears. —Carried.

tion and fear of offending the Chinese minister's wife or receive callers.

"That," said the secretary, "because she does not speak English would be highly improper according to our etiquette, for a gentleman to call late for her. Neither does she speak English, and there is no one who could translate for his wife.

"How is it that the minister speak English when you have been here so well?"

"I acquired the language of England, but the minister is now an old man, sixty-one years old: never too old to learn, studying the language."

Returning to the more important subject of the ladies, the reporter learned that the wife of the Chinese minister to Paris was quite a favorite in society, and went out very often.

"That is," said the secretary, "when she has a very charming accomplished daughter, highly educated in several European languages well. She does not go out late for her mother."

"Is the minister's wife the only Chinese lady here?"

"Yes. The other members of the embassy, if they are married, have left their wives at home. The minister alone has two Chinese maids with him, as there is really no room for any other ladies in the house," said the secretary.

He then explained that the term of office of the members of the embassy is three years, after which they have six months leave of absence in which to visit China and visit their families, and on returning, if they did return, it was optional with them. The minister to the second Chinese Embassy, however, brought but two members of it with him, in connection with the first embassy. As the secretary said, three years is quite a long time to be separated from one's family, and the seclusion of the minister's wife has been generally understood. The secretary stated that the reason given was the only one. She occasionally goes out riding, but makes no calls and mixes little in society. The advent of the Chinese ladies have been a blessing to here.

According to the calculations of the registrar-general, the area of England and Wales at the time of taking the last census was equal to nearly one and a half acres for every human being. If the population had been equally distributed the distance between two neighboring individuals would have been 180 yards. Saxony and Belgium are the only two other European countries in which the population is as dense as it is in England. Room, however, is constantly increasing. About the commencement of the present century, the proportion of individual to individual on an average would have been about 300 yards; in 1821, 132 yards; in 1871, 26 yards.

Chinese Babies.

It was at the residence of the Chinese minister, and the representative of the Washington Repbulican had called to enquire about the health of the minister's baby daughter. Tsn Shan Pung, first secretary of Legation, had said that the very young lady was in excellent health and spirits and was growing rapidly. Then the reporter said he had a very delicate question to ask, and begged the secretary not to be offended, but if the question was a violation of Oriental etiquette to at once inform him and they would talk about the weather or some other harmless subject.

"It is customary, you know," continued the reporter, "in this country to publish quite minute details of the private life of high-born babies and—"

"I understand," said the secretary, over whose face there had crept a smile of appreciation and amusement, "you want to know about the baby's feet. Some one has said that they were already bound. I assure you that it is no such thing. Her feet are just like any American baby's."

"But is it not true that the growth of the feet of the noble Chinese girls is stopped early in life?"

"Certainly it is true, just as it is true that the waists of all high-born American ladies are compressed," and the secretary illustrated by compressing his own rather slender waist with his two hands. "To make the ladies' feet small," he continued, "is a Chinese fashion. It is a demand of fashion or custom in both cases, and nothing more, I assure you."

"At what age are the feet bound?"

"When the little girl is six or seven years old. The process is so gradual that I think there is no pain about it whatever; no more than when an American girl binds her waist."

"Is there nothing peculiar, then, about the very early life of a Chinese maiden?"

"Nothing in the world. She is just like an American baby. About two months ago the members of the Chinese Embassy celebrated the day when she was a month old by a dinner at Wormley's. The next celebration in her honor will be when she is old enough to go to school. Then there will be another dinner. These will be no more festivities for her until she is married."

"When will she be old enough to go to school?"

"When she is seven or eight years old."

"I suppose you mean by 'going to school' that an instructress will be brought into the family?"

"Not always. Sometimes a rich little Chinese girl will have a governess in the house, but often several wealthy families employ a tutoress together and send their children to her for instruction. It is a priuate school."

Just then there came down from the

One of the German newspapers recently called attention to the scarcity of apothecary shops in Berlin, and within a fortnight afterward thirteen new shops were licensed and for six others licenses were under consideration by the police authorities.

The eastern quarter of London is undergoing rapid changes, the like of which are declared to have been previously unknown since the great fire. Recently no fewer than 130 houses, some of them the oldest in London, have been pulled down in order to make space for a new thoroughfare leading to Tower hill.

A hygienic museum is to be founded in Berlin. A large collection from the exhibit of the great "hygienic exhibition" which closed Dec. 15, has already been made as a nucleus, and the objects are to be stored for the winter in the exposition building until permanent quarters can be secured. The plans are in capable hands, and great things are expected to result.

In France there are now 103 lunatic asylums, 61 of which are public, and 42 private. Nine of the total are exclusively for men, and 14 for women, the rest being for both sexes. During the last fifteeen years a considerable increase in lunacy has occurred in France. There were 34,000 lunatics in 1868, and there are now 60,000.

British journals bring interesting details of the industrial census of India in 1881. The total population of the country is 253,891,821, and of this enormous number only 85,544 persons are British-born subjects, and 56,646 are soldiers, and 12,088 females. Practically, less than 17,000 male civilians, wielding an army of 56,000 men, control the vast empire. The whole number of European returned is only 146,612. The occupations of 102,620,000 persons are defined, and of these 71.199,000 are engaged in agriculture or the care of animals. In industrial occupations 21,041.000 persons are engaged—12,859,000 males and 8,182,-000 females. The workers in cotton and flax number 3,485,465; in clothing, 2,815,280; in vegetable food, 3,165,429; in stone, clay and earthenware, 1,800,-974; in houses and buildings, 836,453; in gums and resins, 762,526; in bamboo, cane, rush, straw and leaves, 680,732; in gold, silver, and precious stones, 472,-956, and in iron and steel only 477,361. Engaged in the work of government—national, local, and municipal—are 1,844,-000 persons, of whom, 315,000 are classed as belonging to the army. The professional classes embrace 1,451,000 persons.

Just then there came down from the upper regions of the house a long, vigorous, infantile wail.

"There," said the secretary, laughing, "is a Chinese baby crying in good English."

"Is she the minister's first child?"

"Oh, no. He has several children at home, but this is the first one, and the first Chinese baby, born in Washington. She is a great pet for the minister and his wife."

"And would be of all the embassy, I suppose, if she was a boy?"

"Oh, that makes no difference. Little boys and girls are treated just alike. It is only when they are grown that our etiquette requires the seclusion of the ladies."

The reporter inquired with much caution and fear of offending why it was that the Chinese minister's wife did not go out or receive callers.

"That," said the secretary," is only because she does not speak English, and it would be highly improper according to our etiquette, for a gentlemen to translate for her. Neither does the minister speak English, and there is no one who could translate for his wife."

"How is it that the minister cannot speak English when you speak it so well?"

The causes which start men upon their careers are often seemingly the most slight and casual.

A reminiscence of Mr. Dilke's which appears in Mr. Buxton Foreman's edition of Keats' works, almost proves that the poet at one time believed in metempsychosis. After the death of Thomas Keats a white rabbit came into the garden of Mr. Dilke, who shot the creature. Keats declared that the poor thing was his brother Tom's spirit, and so earnest was he in this view, impressing it upon others in the circle, that when the rabbit was put on the table no one could look at it, and it was taken away untouched.

Important to Ruptured Persons.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. Flax-Seed.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. PULLMAN CITY.

No Policemen, No Saloons, No Aldermen, No Debts—A Beautiful Town Built by a Great Manufacturing Company.

Correspondence New York Sun.

When in 1880 the rapidly extending business of the Pullman Palace Car Company necessitated the erection of new works, Mr. George M. Pullman found an opportunity for carrying into effect a theory which he had long entertained. The first question to be decided was as to the location of the shops. A great deal of land was required, and to secure the necessary space in any portion of Chicago would have called for the expenditure of a very large sum of money. More than three thousand workingmen were to be employed, and if the shops were located in the city these men, with their families, would be compelled to live in crowded and unhealthy tenements, in miserable streets, and they and their children would be subject to all the temptations and snares of a great city. Looking at the matter from the standpoint of a capitalist, and from that of the workingman as well, Mr. Pullman felt that it would be better for all concerned if the new works could be established in the country. There was no town already built that commended itself to him. In all to which his attention was drawn there were cheap and shabby houses, numerous saloons and associations not of the best. To establish the enterprise in one of these would, perhaps answer the purposes of the company, but the moral and physical well-being of the working people would have to be lost sight of. Unwilling to give up his theory, Mr. Pullman determined to build a town to order. There is a provision in the charter of the Pullman Palace Car Company which prevents that corporation from owning as much land as was required for Mr. Pullman's purpose. To obviate this difficulty the Pullman Land Company was organized, Mr. Geo. Pullman being the president and owner of the majority of stock.

South of Chicago, for many miles, the country is very undesirable. Near the lake it resembles the pine barrens of the sea shore. Further inland it is marshy and low. The double tracks of the Eastern trunk lines form ridges through it, and between them the surface water accumulates, or trickles away to Lake Calumet. This is a small body of water which empties into Lake Michigan at South Chicago, and the shores of which are soft and swampy. The object of Mr. Pullman being to find cheap land, he was easily satisfied with that offered to him in this locality. Three thousand acres were purchased at a merely nominal price. The tract is situated along and near Lake bottom is forced by means of pumps through pipes to the farm owned by the company, more than three miles away, where it is used for purposes of fertilization. Many misgivings were expressed at first concerning the wisdom of this scheme of sanitation, but its success has been demonstrated; engineers from all parts of the world have investigated it carefully, and have invariably expressed themselves as satisfied of its efficacy. The gas works are situated on the shore of Lake Calumet, just east of the main buildings of the company.

On the 2nd of April, 1881, the Pullman shops were started, the great Corliss engine which figured so conspicuously at the Centennial Exposition furnishing the motive power. With the shops in operation turning out scores of railroad cars of every description daily, the theory of Mr. Pullman was to be put to the test. His theory needs to be understood before his town can be comprehended. The Sun's correspondent visited him at his Chicago office recently and made a few enquiries. Mr. Pullman is calm, dignified, and courteous, a little past middle life, but just in the prime of a wondersully successful business career.

MR. PULLMAN'S OWN ACCOUNT OF THE ENTERPRISE.

"The building of Pullman," he said, "was undertaken simply as a matter of business. I have little of the sentimental in my natnre. I abhor abstruse problems. I can see nothing in this enterprise which is not a matter of finance, pure and simple. I have always believed that there is a great deal of good in human nature; that men naturally prefer to be clean, to have pleasant homes, and to be respected by their fellowmen. We are all very largely creatures of our own surroundings and associations. If you take a boorish countryman with the mud of the farm on his boots, or a city rough, into your parlor, in the presence of your wife and children, he will sit up a little straighter and attempt to be a little more polite than is habitual with him. In a city like this the scarcity of room drives mechanics and other workingmen to the most miserable tenements, where cleanliness is almost impossible, and where, the association being nearly all bad, they and their families find it almost impossible to lift themselves above the squalor with which they are surrounded. Then, too, the temptations of the city are not to be overlooked. Denied many social advantages, the workingman is apt to drift for recreation into low saloons, where his earnings are spent, and soon his misery and that of his family are increased by his habits of dissipation. Such a man is not more profitable to his employer than he is to himself. Believing these things as I do, I could not but feel that a place like Pullman would be a good investment. Solely as such was it undertaken. I have not

The object of Mr. Pullman being to find cheap land, he was easily satisfied with that offered to him in this locality. Three thousand acres were purchased at a merely nominal price. The tract is situated along and near Lake Calumet, and lies on both sides of the Illinois Central railway, about fourteen miles from this city. To build a city in such a place looked like a great undertaking. But it was exactly what Mr. Pullman desired. He wanted everything to be new, and of the best quality. The sewerage problem was the next to be solved. The land was, as has been said, low and level. No natural outlets could be contrived. A great well was, therefore, dug, and all the sewers of the town, which were quickly built in the most substantial manner in all the streets, were made to centre in this cesspool. Simultaneously with the sewers water and gas pipes were laid. The streets, which are broad and straight, were then laid out and macadamized.

LAYING OUT A CITY.

While this work was in progress under the superintendence of the sanitary engineer employed for the purpose by Mr. Pullman, the architect, Mr. Beaman, of New York, was busy with his plans. It is not often that an architect has an opportunity to draw plans for an entire city at once. Mr. Beaman, however, undertook the work with something of the enthusiasm of Mr. Pullman, and catching the latter's ideas, was able to transfer them to paper, and take the first steps towards their execution. When the material was at hand special trains with hundreds of workingmen were run from Chicago in the morning, returning with them at night; and in a few months the coming city began to assume shape.

The great shops of the company were erected near the Illinois Central railroad tracks. These buildings are very substantial, and in some sense ornamental. They are of pressed brick and stone, with roofs of slate, cover fifteen acres, and accommodate more than 2,000 workingmen. South of the works, and separated from them by a wide boulevard, along which stand the handsomest houses in the town, lies the city. It is regularly laid out, with wide

Such a man is not more profitable to his employer than he is to himself. Believing these things as I do, I could not but feel that a place like Pullman would be a good investment. Solely as such was it undertaken. I have not been disappointed in it in any respect. It is a beautiful place, and even on the hardest the effect of the handsome surroundings has been beneficial. On a broad avenue lined with cosy houses, with flowers and lawns on every hand, and scrupulous neatness everywhere maintained, a man of the dullest mind would feel ashamed to appear in public in his shirt sleeves or barefooted. I have noticed it myself. Some of the families moving into the nice new cottages with their old dirty traps made me feel a little discouraged once, but it was not long before, in the windows of these same houses, pretty flowers were visible, and the appearance of the inmates gradually improved. Everything depends upon one's surroundings. The Pullman enterprise appears to many people to be a very complicated matter. It is not. If it had been I would not have undertaken it. It was necessary simply that the execution of the plans should be in the hands of one man. I do not pretend to say that some other man could not have succeeded as well as I, but I do maintain that some one man should have the sole directing voice in such an undertaking. I feel that if the building of Pullman had depended on a corporation or an association it would not have been built as it is. For instance, I am satisfied that in the matter of the theatre nobody would have agreed with me that the expense for that purpose was advisable. As it is, there have been no disagreements, for the reason that there is nobody to disagree with. The town is as clean financially as it is in every other respect. It has no debts nor no mortgages. It is all paid for, and has been from the first.

"Usually, when land schemes are set on foot there is a big boom for a while, and then a flattening out. Some people look at Pullman from cars, and say it is pretty, but it won't last. It will last. While this work was in progress under the superintendence of the sanitary engineer employed for the purpose by Mr. Pullman, the architect, Mr. Beaman, of New York, was busy with his plans. It is not often that an architect has an opportunity to draw plans for an entire city at once. The great shops of the company were erected near the Illinois Central railroad tracks. These buildings are very substantial, and in some sense ornamental. They are of pressed brick and stone, with roofs of slate, cover fifteen acres, and accommodate more than 2,000 workingmen. South of the works, and separated from them by a wide boulevard, along which stand the handsomest houses in the town, lies the city. It is regularly laid out, with wide streets, and compact and solidly built houses, all of brick and stone, with handsome lawns, shade trees, and flower beds. These houses are 1,426 in number, and vary in rent according to their size, location, and conveniences. In front of the main building of the company's works, and in plain view from the Illinois Central railroad, is a beautiful park with a miniature lake, many handsome flower beds, rockeries, solid stone copings, shrubbery and fountain. South of the depot, which is a fine Gothic structure, is the Arcade, and just east is the hotel. The Arcade is a spacious and elegant building, which contains all the stores of the city, and the post office, library, theatre, bank and cafe. All the stores and offices face a wide tile-laid interior court, with galleries on the second floor reached by easy stairs. The building cost $300,000, and at night its interior resembles nothing so much as a bazaar or fair. The hotel is a massive building, elegantly furnished and well kept. The market house, arranged something after the style of the Arcade, affords ample facilities for the butchers of the town. The church is a beautiful Gothic structure of stone, with green stone trimmings and a lofty spire. The school house is commodious and sunny. The livery stable has accommodation for scores of horses, and is, besides, the headquarters of the fire department. Near the centre of the company's works is the huge water tower. Under this is the sewerage cesspool, and in the top is a tank supplied by contract with Lake Michigan water from the Hyde Park water works. From this tank water is distributed throughout the town. The works will make it permanent. If for any reason the works were to close permanently, the town, with its fine houses, sewerage, and other conveniences, would prosper as a suburb. I have done everything with a view to permanence, and have made no attempt to create a furore. Having decided to establish our works fourteen miles from the city, the building of houses to accommodate the 2,000 workingmen and their families became necessary. We could not undertake to convey them back and forth, and, besides, the location of the shops in the country was for the purpose, in part, of removing our men from the city. We could not expect 2,000 men and their families to live out on the prairies and be contented unless they were provided with the conveniences of modern civilized life. It was here that my theory was put into force. I believe the men who have pleasant surroundings will be better men than those whose surroundings are bad, and that this being the case, the employer will derive a great benefit. I have therefore spent a great deal of money beautifying the town and in providing for the moral and physical development of the people, and it has paid me well. A man who can bring his mind down to understand the simplest business proposition can fathom the Pullman scheme very easily. It is simplicity itself. We are landlords and employers. That is all there is of it."

A CHURCH OFFERED FOR SALE.

It may well be asked if Mr. Pullman is not too modest, or if he does not do himself an injustice when he asserts that sentiment has had nothing to do with his great work. The city of Pulman, as it stands, represents an outlay of about $6,000,000. All the buildings in the place are owned by the company. Nobody else can obtain possession of them for the reason that they are not for sale. They are rented to anybody of good character for sume calculated to return six per cent. on the investment. So many houses were built at one time they were, of course, put up much cheaper than they could have been constructed one by one. The rents are therefore, much less than those asked for houses equally good in the city, or even in their neighboring towns. To supply so large a population with religious and educational facilities became the duty of the founder of the town, as well as to provide for stores and markets. A fine school house was built, and teachers were employed. A costly church was erected. The arcade and market place were built, and the church and stores offered for rent. Mr. Pullman knew that the church was a better one than any new society could afford to occupy, He built it expensively, however, for be believed that a congregation would be able to pay for it. The rent is $50 per month. It has not been taken yet, but there are several church organizations, and there is considerable rivalry among them as to which will obtain the prize. If other churches are needed they will be built by the company.

Feeling that the town would attract a good many visitors, Mr. Pullman built the hotel. It was owned and managed by the company, its landlord, so called, being merely an employee. The fire department is owned and operated in the same way, as also are the livery stable, the theatre, the public library, and every fixture of the town. A stranger arriving at Pullman puts up at a hotel managed by one of Mr. Pullman's employees, visits a theatre where all the attendants are in Mr. Pullman's service, drinks water and burns gas which Mr. Pullman's water and gas works supply, hires one of his outfits from the manager of Mr. Pullman's livery stable, visits a school in which the children of Mr. Pullman's employees are taught by other employees, gets a bill changed at Mr. Pullman's bank, is unable to make a purchase of any kind save from some tenant of Mr. Pullman's, and at night is guarded by a fire department, every member of which, from the chief down, is in Mr. Pullman's service. Everything is first-class in its way. The library has 10,000 volumes, and is the personal gift of Mr. Pullman. The theatre, which, like the library, is in the second story of the Arcade building, is one of the most elegantly arranged places of amusement in the world. It prices are reasonable, and it is open to dramatic and literary entertainments of the best class only. During the first six months that the library was open, seventy-six per cent. of the books taken out were on historical, biographical, or scientific subjects.

EYE WATER.—Three level tablespoonsful of white copperas, three level tablespoonsful of salt, one and one half pints of water. Boil this for a few moments and put a drop in the eye night and morning. Be careful in the use of it, as it is poisonous. This is known to be an unfailing remedy for weak and inflamed eyes. It should be diluted if used with babies.

TO SWEETEN RANCID BUTTER.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman states that she has rendered butter that was too rancid, even for cooking, perfectly sweet by cutting it into pieces of about a pound each, wrapping the pieces in clean, white cloths, and burying them a foot or more deep in the ground, allowing them to lie a week or two, then washing and resalting. A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker advises the boiling of the butter, with the addition of a handful of salt and a teaspoonful of soda, to two or three pounds of butter, then pouring it into a crock to cool.

LUMINOUS PAINT.—Take oyster shells and clean them with warm water. Put them in the fire for half an hour, and take them out, cool them, pound them fine, and remove the worthless gray parts. Put the powder into a crucible, with alternate layers of sulphur. Close the lid and seal it up with sand made into a stiff paste with beer. After the crucible has been over the fire for an hour, and afterwards cooled, the contents will be found to be white. Sift the powder carefully, and mix it with gum water. This gives a paint which remains luminous for a long time after dark, if it is first exposed to daylight.

GILDING LEATHER.—We find in the Papierzeitung the following method described for gilding leather. It is first moistened with a sponge, then stretched and tacked to a board. When dry it receives a coat of thick isinglass solution, then one of white of egg that has been beaten and allowed to settle. Upon this is laid lightly with a brush sheets of silver foil, which are then pressed down with a wad of cotton wool. When this is dry it is painted over with yellow leather varnish, which gives it a beautiful golden appearance. A varnish for bronze boots and slippers is made by dissolving aniline red in shellac or other varnish.

REMOVING STAINS.—A mixture which is excellent for removing grease spots and stains from carpets and clothing is made of two ounces of ammonia, two ounces of white castile soap, one ounce of glycerine, one ounce of ether. Cut the soap fine, dissolve in one pint of water over the fire; add two quarts of water. This should be mixed with water in the proportion of a teacupful to one ordinary-sized pail of water. Mix thoroughly, and wash soiled

A CITY WITH NO CORPORATIVE GOVERNMENT.

Although the city has a population of 7,000 it has no government save that which is exercised in common over the entire township, county, and State. In other words, there is no corporate government. No arrest has ever been made within the Pullman tract. There are no policemen or constables; no Justice's court, no Aldermen, no public functionaries of any description.

"How in the world do you govern these people?" is a question often asked of Mr. Pullman.

"We govern them," he says, "in the same way a man governs his house, his store, or his workshop. It is all simple enough, when you come to look at it."

So it seems. A man going there to live applies for a house to the superintendent, who draws up a lease which may be cancelled by either party on ten days' notice. The company will not disturb him if he is a good citizen, and he may keep his house as long as he pleases, providing he does not sell liquor. On the other hand, if he is dissatisfied and wishes to leave he can do so at any time, and is not eucumbered with a lease running a year or more. No liquor is sold in the town. The only law against it, however, is an unwritten one whereof Mr. Pullman is the author. To provide healthful amusement and recreation for the people, Mr. Pullman has fitted handsome boat houses on Lake Calumet, and this beautiful body of water is nightly covered with boat loads of pleasure-seekers. There are many organizations among the workingmen, including a debating society, a literary association, a brass band, a baseball club, and others. It is the desire of Mr. Pullman to encourage all these as much as possible. He feels the need of a newspaper in the town, and intends soon to establish one. It will be edited and managed by his employes. He has no selfish purpose in establishing this journal, his sole motive being to give the people the news at little expense, and afford them certain amusement. He thinks, also, since they have organized so many societies, that it will be very entertaining and instructive to them to have ther proceedings reported.

Any more sketch of this town must be

Mix thoroughly, and wash soiled garments in it. For removing spots, use a sponge or clean flannel cloth, and with a dry cloth rub as dry as possible. Woollen goods may be made to look bright and fresh by being sponged with this.

President Year.

This is "Presidentyear" in the United States, and there will be an unusual flutter in political circles in consequence. Arrangements are now being made for the national convention of the respective parties, to nominate their candidates for President and Vice-President, and to lay down their party platforms for the campaign. Of course the "platforms" are usually framed with a special view of catching the popular favor, and sometimes not much attention is paid to them afterwards. It is now pretty well understood that the question of Protection will receive much greater attention during the coming contest than for some time past. The many issues coming out of the late civil war have now become dead issues and outside of trade matters and Polygamy there are few subjects of great importance before the nation. The Republican party has always favored protection, but it is now well known that its influence is much on the wane, and it will require good piloting to ensure its success this time. Of course the business depression will tell seriously against the success of the party in the next contest.

A great deal of attention is just now being given in the United States to the discussion of the respective claims of the prominent men supposed to be available as candidates for the Presidency. The policy of the parties now appears to be to bring out some "dark horse" in the end, as the only available compromise between the leading rivals, and it is therefore quite probable that, on either side, the men selected in the end will be the men about whom least is now being said. The only wonder is that, under such a system, as good a class of men have been elected as have occupied the President's chair for years past. Lincoln and Hayes and Garfield were certainly all good men for the position, and Arthur has turned out far better than was generally expected. Whether Arthur will again be the nominee of the Republican party is now very

He thinks, also, since they have organized so many societies, that it will be very entertaining and instructive to them to have ther proceedings reported.

Any more sketch of this town must be imperfect. There are so many things to write about that it is impossible to cover them all. The idea uppermost in one's mind after seeing and understanding the place is, perhaps, that the humblest citizen there is in the enjoyment of many advantages which only wealth can supply, and that, although far from a capitalist himself, he suffers few of the inconveniences of poverty. There is no extortion anywhere, and the fullest freedom consistent with good morals is granted.

Sweet charity is the antidote for bitter misery.

Canada is certainly rich in phosphates, as well as in many other classes of valuable minerals. The trade in the exportation of phosphates has grown wonderfully each year for the past five years, and as new beds are being found and new companies are making extensive purchases for old beds, the prospects are that our export trade will very largely increase in the years to come. From the port of Montreal alone no less than 17,160 tons were exported during the last year. In 1880 the quantity exported was but 7,500 tons. The increase as been steadily growing each year since. Phosphates are among the most valuable of agricultural fertilizers and their importance is more recognized in Great Britain than here. Our Canadian farmers would do well to give more attention to their use.

times not much attention is paid to them afterwards. It is now pretty well understood that the question of Protection will receive much greater attention during the coming contest than for some time past. The many issues coming out of the late civil war have now become dead issues and outside of trade matters and Polygamy there are few subjects of great importance before the nation. Lincoln and Hayes and Garfield were certainly all good men for the position, and Arthur has turned out far better than was generally expected. Whether Arthur will again be the nominee of the Republican party is now very doubtful. The popular cry in regard to him from week to week is so fluctuating that it is evident he has not a very strong hold on the popular favor.

To look back to antiquity is one thing, to go back to it another. If we look back to it, it should be as those who are running a race, only to press forward the faster, and to leave the beaten still further behind.

The outlook for the farmers is not very good for the new year. How the harvests for the coming year may turn out Heaven alone knows. The farmers, as a whole, in this Province are feeling pretty poor just now. Their ordinary grain crops last year were much below the average and the prices being so unexpectedly small, the amount of money their crops bring is probably not more than one half as great as was expected. In a country like ours, so largely dependent on its agricultural resources for its actual wealth, such a falling off in a single year is one of the most serious business calamities that could have overtaken us. Another bad harvest just now, and another year of low prices for grain, would bring ruin to many hundreds of business men not themselves engaged in agriculture at all. In Canada, at least, nearly every man feels a direct interest in the success of the farmer.

RIDING A HORSE MACKEREL.

An Exciting Ride on a Whale by the Second Mate of the "Weepin' Susan."

"See that man?" said the captain of a cod fisherman at the Fulton market slip, pointing to a round-shouldered, long-limbed sailor who was busy scraping down the mainmastwith a piece of window-pane: "wall, he's rid what ain't a-goin' to be rid again. No, he didn't ride out no gale o' wind, nor no sea sarpint, nor no Davy Jones' cow. What he buckled to was a reg'lar out an outer of a hoss mackerel. I seen him do it," added the skipper, hammering the rail with a belaying pin; "and he rid him well, too. Hi! Amos, drop down a minute, will ye?"

Amos slackened away the halyard that had suspended him in mid air and lowered away, and coming forward, wrenched the reporter's arm with New England cordiality.

"I ain't much on pipin' my own horn," he said; "but as Captain Lish has made the affidavy I'm bound to stick to it. It come," he continued, seating himself on the rail, "somethin' like this: I was second mate of the mackerel-man Weepin' Susan. That wasn't her registered name, but she was so master damp when close hauled that we gev her the handle sort of off-hand, and it stuck to her like burrs on a curly dog. We generally lay on and by between Biddeford and M'uhiggan, and in a stress of weather put into the first hole we could ketch. One evenin' it came on to blow, and the hull fleet got inside of Fort Popham and laid it out, a snortin' nor-easter. After she blowed out, it came on a dead calm, and the boys got on what they call a racket. There was over 300 sail of mackerel-men packed into a little harbor, so you could almost jump aboard of 'em one from another, and on each was a crew of from 10 to 15 men, making probably 4,000 men in all. Wall, about noon, somebody sounds a fog horn, and in a minute more over 1,600 of them fog horns was a tootin' like they had gone crazy, and the other hands what hadn't horns was a-lammin' on tin pans they'd yanked out of the galley, and everybody was a-yellin'. "Wall the hull gang was agoin' it when our skipper noticed a big school of what we took to be mackerel right across the bay in shore. You kin bet we dropped them horns and jumped for the boats, and in a minute was under way. A half dozen of the others see what was up and pu after us, but we got there first, hev over the net and was round the school in short commons. SELECT VARIETIES.

Prudery is the caricature of modesty.

Good breeding consists in having no particular mark of any profession but a general elegance of manners.

Be courageous and noble-minded; our own hearts, and not other men's opinions of us, forms our true honor.

Often the world discovers a man's moral worth only when its injustice has nearly destroyed him.

The feeble tremble before opinion, the foolish defy it, the wise judge it, the skillful direct it.

We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing, while others judge us by what we have already done.

If you would be pungent, be brief; for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.

True glory takes root, and then spreads; all false pretences, like flowers, fall to the ground; nor can any counterfeit last long.

A man who is able to employ himself innocently is never miserable. It is the idle who are wretched. If I wanted to inflict the greatest punishment on a fellow creature, I would shut him alone in a dark room without employment.

The talent of turning man into ridicule, and exposing to laughter those one converses with, is the qualification of little minds and ungenerous tempers. A young man with this cast of mind cuts himself off from all manner of fmprovement.

Never did any soul do good but it came readier to do the same again, with more enjoyment. Never was love, or gratitude, or bounty practised, but with increasing joy, which made the practiser still more in love with the fair act.

No one of my fellows can do that special work for me which I have come into the world to do; he may do a higher work, but he cannot do my work. I cannot hand my work over to him, any more than I can hand over my responsibility or my gifts.

Suffer not your thoughts to dwell on the injury you have received or the provoking words that have been spoken to you. Not only learn the art of neglecting them at the time you receive them, but let them grow less and less every moment, until they die out of your mind.

In haulin' in the net we worked into shoal water, and I was standin' for'ard and holdin' the seine, when there came a jerk and a splash, and a big fish riz right in front of me, and the first thing I knew I was on top of a hoss mackerel 12 foot long. I fell right astride of it, and in tryin' to fend off the critter I grabbed it by the gills, and Lord bless ye! in a second I was rushin' along on that ere critter's back like a steam engine. I was so took that I hung on for all I was worth, the lads a-screamin' and a-yellin' so't I thought my time had come. Down went the big cuss, but he couldn't sink me on account of the shoal water. Then he turned up the beach, leadin' as luck would have it, right along one of these 'ere fences or fish wires, and goin' like lightnin', the spray a-flyin' and I a-bracin' back like I was leadin' a charge. In a minute or so we reached the fence, and the critter gev a sharp turn and dashed up along to'ards the boats again, a stretch of 200 yards. By this time the riggin' of the hull fleet was black with the lads a-screamin' and hurrahin'. I don't know how it came, but afore the critter reached the boat it slewed, and off I went, but hangin' on like grim death, his gills cuttin' into my hands like knives. But I was bound to hang on or bust, and hang on I did. My slidin' to le-ward headed the big critter in, and he rushed clean on to the flat. A Hint to Callers.

Now that a good many evenings are being spent out the question of just what constitutes a fair "evening" is more frequently discussed by both callers and hosts than is often imagined. One of the leading magazines has devoted an able article to the subject, but it is not worth the reproducing. We all know that, on both sides, altogether depends on the class of company. Mr. Jones, in his younger days, spent some evenings, very pleasant all round, where it seemed very short up to the small, wee hours past midnight. He visited other places where ten minutes was quite too long an evening for the pleasure of either party. Mr. Jones is a representative man of the whole of us in this particular. One writer thinks half an hour is about the safe thing for an evening call, ordinarily. One thing we know, and that is just what attention is directed to just now: A great many acceptable callers are much too thoughtless about the hour of leaving. In most well-regulated families the preparations for night retiring begin pretty early —say between nine and ten o'clock—and to prevent such regularity is something to be avoided. Of course, nearly all hosts

Mark Twain has hit upon a feasible way to protect his works in England. More just than the United States, England extends copyright to foreigners, and with the sole proviso that the work shall be first published in her country. Mark Twain, therefore, publishes his books in London one day before they are issued at home, and so protects himself in both markets.

That able and conspicuous member of the Gladstone Cabinet, Mr. Chamberlain, caused much laughter and many cheers by closing a public address on the present issue "between the peers and the people between the privileges of the few and the rights of many,' as follows:—"I am inclined to hope, in the words of that beautiful Church litany which is read every Sunday, that all the nobility 'may be endured with grace, wisdom, and understanding.'"

At the siege of Sebastopol a formidable mine had been dug and loaded under the Malakoff tower. If General MacMahon had not chanced to discover in the barrack one wire leading from a well-concealed voltaic pile to a large quantity of powder, and another connecting it with the powder magazine, the whole victorious force might have been blown into the air after having gained possessiou of the fort. The wires were all cut, but the powder magazine could not be found. Some of the French soldiers were setting fire to the empty gabion which had been thrust into the windows of the tower in order to barricade it. One of the gabions appeared to be moving. A French officer called out that if any one was there who could speak French he might come without fear. The gabion was pushed through the window and a very young Russian officer crept out. He was assured that he and any others surrendering as prisouers of war would be well treated. After saying a few words in Russian at the window he was joined by four officers and two hundred common soldiers. They requested through him to be taken away at once. This request suggested some knowledge of an impending explosiou. The young officer was therefore ordered to point out the position of the powder magazine. The lad made no answer. A French subaltern said to the commanding officer that the Russian ought to be shot if he refused to obey the order given to save so many lives. The youth kept silence with a haughty glance of indignation at the subaltern, apparently for supposing that he would betray a secret under a threat. Of course, nearly all hosts are too polite to drop any hint, but no sensible caller should wait to hear anything drop.

The unhealthfulness of many parts of Africa is the great obstacle in the way of opening it to civilization. Nine out of twenty French missionaries have died in two years, and the ranks of the International society's pioneers have been sadly depleted. The news has just come that James Stewart, C. E., who was building the road between Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika, is dead. Explorers agree that the insalubrity of the country is largely due to the fact that the excessive luxuriance of vegetation along the river banks raises them above their proper level, cutting off the drainage from the plains. Dr. Schweinfurth and the Portuguese explorers, Capella and Ivenus, are convinced that a great change in the climate can be made by scientific drainage, and that, in fact, the country drained by some large rivers can be made healthful and habitable by the expenditure of a few thousand dollars.

The youth kept silence with a haughty glance of indignation at the subaltern, apparently for supposing that he would betray a secret under a threat. The French chief formed a platoon to shoot him, and he turned his face to his executioners. An old Russian major who understood French ran forward, took the commandant by the hand, drew him to a heap of earth and pointed downward. The earth was quickly shovelled away, and barrels containing eighty-eight thousand pounds of gunpowder were discovered. A strong French guard was set over them. The young Russian officer was told to go with the other prisoners. He gave a military salute and kissed the old Russian major's hand.

"Do not blame him for showing you the powder," he said in French to the commandant, with trembliug voice and tears in his eyes. "He is my father."

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, JAN. 25, 1884.

—The Ontario Legislature opened on Wednesday and re-elected Col. Clark, Speaker. The Speech from the Throne was delivered yesterday. A summary of the proceedings will appear in our next issue.

—Who says the Liberal cause is not advancing? Nine elections have taken place in Ontario during the past quarter, and how many do you think the Tories won? One! The Liberals carried the other eight. 8 to 1 are heavy odds.

—The County Council met on Tuesday and proceeded to elect a Warden. The ballot resulted in favor of Mr. B. C. Lloyd, Reeve of Camden. Mr. Lloyd may not be brilliant, but we believe his regime will be characterized by impartiality and square dealing—at least we have reason to hope so. Of his course in the Council during the past two years there has been no cause for complaint, and he being one of the oldest, one of the most painstaking and industrious members of the Council, had a claim on the office. Of course there were others of the Council whose claims were equally as good, but it is satisfactory to know that the honor fell to one of the deserving members, though no doubt the wire-pulling of the "Boss" and the "Shadow" had much to do in making the selection. We trust, however, that these worthies will not find in Mr. Lloyd the willing tool they would like him to be.

—It would seem that Mr. Wilson has laid himself out this year to run the whole county election. Under the plea of no politics, a clique obtained a majority in the Council, and no sooner did they get there than they threw off their sheep's clothing, and went politics straight. To what greater length they may carry out their designs, time alone will reveal.

—Ex-Coun. Lowry should feel flattered Mr. Roe branded him as a traitor and the judges accepted his word for it.

—When the next election comes round some body will work up a disagreement with Mr. Roe, and then Roe will get him to buy cats for him at $2 apiece. The dodge worked so well this time it is sure to be tried again. It is a new "wrinkle" in electoral corruption worthy of a patent.

—The Dominion Parliament was opened Thursday of last week by Governor Lansdowne, with the usual flourish of trumpets. The speech presented a very meagre bill of fare for the session. It opened with the usual congratulatory clause on the home government's admirable appointment to the office of Governer-General, and the next paragraph was devoted to a sort of admission of business depression. "I rejoice to learn," His Excellency was made to say in slip-shod English and doubtful grammar, "that although the last harvest has been less productive than its predecessors, and although there are indications that the rapid expansion of your commerce has to some extent been followed by over trading, the general condition of the Dominion is such as to justify me in congratulating me upon its prosperity." The people generally will fail to see where the congratulations come in. The farmer with a short crop and poor prices; the mechanic and laborer, in competition with whom the Government have brought thousands of immigrants whose passages were paid out of the public chest; and the mercantile classes who have seen the business failures roll up from 755 in 1882, aggregating $8,139,000, to 1,464 in 1883, aggregating $22,155,000—hardly feel in the humor for indulging in a great amount of adulation over a fiscal policy which has largely contributed to bringing about such a state of affairs. A number of paragraphs follow referring to the Fisheries Exhibition, Consolidation of the Statutes, the British Columbia Settlement, Indian affairs—all of minor importance and merely put in to spin the document out to a respectable length. Then follows a confession of the failure of the 3 per cent guarantee on C.P.R. stock, and an intimation that further concessions to the Co. are to be granted. The only government measure of any importance promised is the franchise bill. The entire speech was a series of apologies for unfulfilled promises.

—The debate on the address opened on Friday. Hon. Edward Blake made a masterly speech. He took the floor the very picture of physical health and intellectual vigor. About him was the air of a man conscious of a good cause and the ability to proceeded to elect a Warden. The ballot resulted in favor of Mr. B. C. Lloyd, Reeve of Camden. Mr. Lloyd may not be brilliant, but we believe his regime will be characterized by impartiality and square dealing—at least we have reason to hope so. Of his course in the Council during the past two years there has been no cause for complaint, and he being one of the oldest, one of the most painstaking and industrious members of the Council, had a claim on the office. Of course there were others of the Council whose claims were equally as good, but it is satisfactory to know that the honor fell to one of the deserving members, though no doubt the wire-pulling of the "Boss" and the "Shadow" had much to do in making the selection. We trust, however, that these worthies will not find in Mr. Lloyd the willing tool they would like him to be.

—It would seem that Mr. Wilson has laid himself out this year to run the whole council—at least those members who are of his political stripe. He was not satisfied with having written out for each a list of the members he would like to have on the committee to strike the standing committees, but he had to roam about from desk to desk seeing that his followers acted up to their instructions. These gentlemen should have sufficient self-respect and independence to tell Mr. Wilson to mind his own business. He is not such a master of orthography that he can afford to give away any of his knowledge of even the rudiments. The "shadow" is evidently trying to wear the "Boss's" boots. Probably he may yet slip in the act.

—Six out of the seven members elected to strike the standing committees were Conservatives. Each of the faithful had his ticket ready, and as the names fell in musical tones from the Clerk they sounded like a well rehearsed ballad. It was "Reid, Carscallen, Wilson, &c." And the arrangement was not changed in any case even to give the thing variety. The Reformers, of course, voted at random for the members they individually thought should be on the committee, irrespective of politics. The result was that not one Reformer was on the select committee and not a chairmanship of a standing committee was awarded outside the ranks of the faithful. A more disgraceful exhibition of party wire pulling was, we venture to say, never witnessed in any council in the province. Even so old and useful a member as Mr. Sharp, Reeve of Ernesttown, was passed by and the chairmanships given to men much inferior in ability and of less experience. It was a plot to "freeze out" Reformers, concocted by the County Clerk and carried into effect by his henchman, the Reeve of Napanee, the man who paraded the streets a few weeks ago looking for votes on the plea that he would not countenance the introduction of politics into municipal matters. It worked well this time but it remains to be seen whether others cannot play the same game in the future. These worthies may find their little game a sort of boomerang which will recoil on their own heads.

—The Town Council is also being run this for indulging in a great amount of adulation over a fiscal policy which has largely contributed to bringing about such a state of affairs. The only government measure of any importance promised is the franchise bill. The entire speech was a series of apologies for unfulfilled promises.

—The debate on the address opened on Friday. Hon. Edward Blake made a masterly speech. He took the floor the very picture of physical health and intellectual vigor. About him was the air of a man conscious of a good cause and the ability to maintain it. His remarks throughout were characterized with a pleasing urbanity, while occasional flashes of humor and good natured sarcasm compelled even those he reflected on to join in the laugh against themselves. But, most noticeable, was the logical coherence and incisive reasoning with which he drew the lines of attack on the ministry and pushed home his arguments. Mr. Blake never appeared to better advantage. He dealt with every feature of the governmental policy with telling effect. Among the new members introduced were Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. D. W. Allison, M. P. Mr. Allison was introduced by Sir Richard and Mr. Wm. Paterson, M. P., amid Opposition applause. This was a realization of Sir Richard's prediction at the Crystal Palace meeting that Mr. Paterson and he would have the pleasure of presenting Mr. Allison to the Speaker.

THE APPEAL CASE DECIDED.

Decision was given in the Lennox appeal case on Saturday last. A summary of the Chief Justice's remarks thereon is given in another column, from which it will be seen Mr. Roe escaped unseating barely by, what another learned judge said on a similar occasion, "the skin of his teeth." The Chief Justice stated that a clear case of bribery was made out in the charge against Lowry, and had the evidence established Lowry's agency the respondent would have been unseated. This the learned judges held the evidence did not do. They agreed with Justice Galt in placing great weight on the fact that Lowry and Roe had had a disagreement about a municipal election and that there was no evidence of a reconciliation. They, therefore, accepted the view that Lowry committed the act of bribery to get even with Roe. This was certainly a weak point in the evidence, but had the judges at the trial allowed the petitioner to place Mr. Lowry in the box, we venture to say the reconciliation and authorization of agency would have been made clear. Nobody here believes that Lowry was acting the part of a traitor. On the contrary, the Conservatives

It worked well this time but it remains to be seen whether others cannot play the same game in the future. These worthies may find their little game a sort of boomerang which will recoil on their own heads.

The Town Council is also being run this year on strict party lines. The first act of the "solid seven" was to capture the nominating committee, and by this means appropriate to themselves the choice positions on the standing committees. A new member from West Ward was given precedence over Mr. Chas. Lane, one of the most valued representatives the town has ever had. The next act was to remove Mr. John Webster from the assessorship, an office he has held some twenty years. Had the change been made on the ground that Mr. Webster had held the office long enough, neither Mr. Webster nor his friends would complain in the least, but this was not the plea for his removal. A lot of trumped up charges of partizanship in the discharge of his duty was brought against him by the Reeve, and notwithstanding that all were clearly explained away, the "solid seven" went for his dismissal. If these men were at all consistent they would have dismissed the Clerk at the same time, for it was shown that he made several of the mistakes charged against Mr. Webster. That they did not do this is very good evidence that their action towards Mr. Webster was prompted solely by their political spleen. By this we do not wish to be understood as desiring the removal of the Clerk; on the contrary, we should be very sorry to see him dismissed for the clerical errors he committed. Both he and Mr. Webster have discharged their duties, we believe, honestly and impartially, and neither should have been arraigned for trifling mistakes which any man—even the immaculate Mr. Wilson—is liable to fall into. The "solid seven" were evidently not satisfied with having all the other offices of the town filled by Conservatives, but must needs capture this as well. It is easy to see now who were crying "wolf, wolf," before the

THE APPEAL CASE DECIDED.

Decision was given in the Lennox appeal case on Saturday last. A summary of the Chief Justice's remarks thereon is given in another column, from which it will be seen Mr. Roe escaped unseating barely by, what another learned judge said on a similar occasion, "the skin of his teeth." The Chief Justice stated that a clear case of bribery was made out in the charge against Lowry, and had the evidence established Lowry's agency the respondent would have been unseated. This the learned judges held the evidence did not do. They agreed with Justice Galt in placing great weight on the fact that Lowry and Roe had had a disagreement about a municipal election and that there was no evidence of a reconciliation. They, therefore, accepted the view that Lowry committed the act of bribery to get even with Roe. This was certainly a weak point in the evidence, but had the judges at the trial allowed the petitioner to place Mr. Lowry in the box, we venture to say the reconciliation and authorization of agency would have been made clear. Nobody here believes that Lowry was acting the part of a traitor. On the contrary, the Conservatives admit he was acting in the best of faith, doing what he could in the way of cat-purchasing to procure Mr. Roe's election. Mr. Lowry would, we believe, have acknowledged this had he been placed under oath and in all probability would have told the source from which came the money he used. It is, therefore, to the exclusion of Mr. Lowry's evidence that it may be said Mr. Roe owes the retention of his seat.

In pushing the case to its utmost extent the Reformers have discharged a public duty. They recognized in Mr. Roe a man whose election was a reproach to the county and possessing the knowledge that his return was procured by corrupt means they resorted to the Courts. That they have been unsuccessful in the proceedings there is not their fault; they saw their duty and performed it like true men. All the ignominy attacked to having a branded blasphemer and corruptionist as the representative of Lennox in the Local Legislature now rests upon the Conservatives who elected him. The Reformers have shown their disapproval, it now lies with the Conservatives to say whether they are satisfied with their choice. We do the respectable portion the credit of believing they are not.

Timely Aid.

A little daughter of the Captain of the steamer "Empress of India" was suddenly attacked with Croup while at a friend's house in Toronto. No medical aid being handy recourse was had to Hagyard's Yellow Oil; this popular household remedy afforded prompt relief and the little girl was as lively as ever in a few days.

What the Figures Reveal.

G. M. Everest of Forest says that in one year one family purchased over fifty bottles of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam for their own use and that of various friends. He has sold this invaluable throat and lung remedy over sixteen years, and its sales are steadily increasing.

LENNOX APPEAL CASE.

The Respondent Escapes being Unseated by the Skin of his Teeth.

The Court of Appeal on Saturday last gave decision in the case of the Lennox Local election. His Lordship the Chief Justice in delivering judgment said as to the agency of Lowry it was immaterial whether his being a member of the municipal council and an avowed Conservative constituted him ipso facto a member of a nominating or executive committee. It was certainly competent to him to dissent from being an agent, and the evidence showed that he did so very emphatically when asked by the candidate himself, and when asked by Mr. Elliott, the Secretary of the Conservative Association. It was said that he afterwards canvassed for the respondent, but that of itself would not constitute him an agent, even if he had in good faith spoken to electors on behalf of the respondent, especially after what had passed. It was not proved that the respondent had, after his repudiation of agency, accepted him as his agent. Lowry did commit one act which and if he were an agent of the respondent the respondent would have been unseated. He referred to the pseudo-purchase for $2 of a cat from the colored man Taylor. One of the learned judges who tried the case, Judge Osler, entertained a suspicion that Lowry was playing false to the respondent. His Lordship thought it clear that the giving of liquor by John Storms to several persons at the blacksmith shop of Lockwood was not within either section 152 or 153. In his opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The Court also concurred in this judgement.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Dr. Kennedy Gets Enthusiastic Over His New Home.

The subjoined letter from Dr. A. Kennedy, formerly of Bath, to J. H. Madden, Esq., of this town, has been handed to us for publication. It gives valuable information as to the climate, products, etc., of Washington Territory. We are pleased to learn that the Doctor is meeting with success in his new home.

SEATTLE, W. T., Jan. 9, 1884.

In reference to the climate of this country I cannot say too much in its praise. To-day the thermometer stands at 60° and everything betokens the approach of spring, as you will see by the budding twigs and specimens of vegetation inclosed. To-day as I passed a flower garden I noticed a rosebud about to expand on one of the bushes, also violets and other tardy plants in bloom. On the lawns the grass is as verdant as it would be at home in the month of May. Already I have seen on the dinner tables onions and radishes recently picked from those gar-

This city is beautifully situated upon the shores of Elliott's Bay, an inlet of Puget Sound, affording good shelter and anchorage to the many ships which come here for coal, lumber, fish and other exports, a most favorable location for the growth of a large and prosperous city.

There are extensive coal fields at Newcastle, 30 miles inland, which are connected with Seattle, over which is carried 1,000 tons of coal daily, a fact which assures a continuation and increase of trade with San Francisco and the southern ports demanding that commodity. Owing to the fact that this port will eventually be the coast terminus of the Northern Pacific R.R. the population has increased from 4,000 in 1881 to 10,000 in 1883, and real estate is "booming" notwithstanding Villard's downfall. A line of railway has been projected to the wheat growing country of Walla Walla, which when constructed will give a great impetus to the growth of Seattle, since all the wheat from Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory will be shipped from this port. One fact which speaks volumes for this place is that it is out of debt, notwithstanding the immense outlay for city improvements, $250,000 having been expended upon street grading alone during 1883. In addition to the above a bonus of $150,000 was given to the Cedar River branch of the N. P. R., $28,000 for public schools and some $22,000 for other purposes. We have a large hospital, state university, fine public schools, theatres, a good divorce law and other institutions indicative of intelligence, wealth and enterprise.

The country, so far as its agricultural condition is concerned, is in a primitive state and resembles what one would imagine Canada to have been previous to settlement—a dense forest extending down to the waters' edge. Coun. PERRY introduced a by-law for the appointment of a High School trustee. In committee of the whole the name of Mr. A. McNeill was inserted and the by-law passed.

Reeve WILSON introduced a by-law for the appointment of an assessor, and the Council went into committee thereon.

Coun. LANE moved, seconded by Coun. PERRY, that Mr. John Webster be re-appointed.

Dep.-Reeve CARSCALLEN moved, seconded by Reeve WILSON, that Mr. Ira Kimmerly be appointed.

Considerable discussion ensued. Reeve Wilson arraigned Mr. Webster on the roll of 1882, charging him with leaving twenty Conservatives off the roll. Mr. Webster on being heard showed that all the parties were on the roll but the property they occupied was not of sufficient value to entitle them to a vote. The Reeve then named specific cases and Mr. Webster in each gave a satisfactory explanation. In discussing the 1883 assessment Mr. Webster showed that the only mistake he had made was in leaving the name of Mr. Tugwell off the roll, and that was done in copying—the omission of the names of Wm. Appelby and Paul Peterson was an oversight on the part of the Clerk. Mr. Datus Denison, who was left off the roll, is a Reformer, and therefore he could not be justly accused of allowing politics to interfere with his duty. After considerable cross-firing the vote was taken and the "solid seven" voted for Mr. Webster's dismissal. The amendment was carried.

Coun. PERRY moved, seconded by Coun. ROSE, that the salary be $125.—Carried.

The committee then rose and reported. On motion for third reading,

Coun. GIBBARD moved, seconded by Coun. PERRY, that the Council go back into committee and substitute the name of Mr. Webster for that of Mr. Kimmerly.—Lost. The yeas and nays were called for and were as follows:—Yeas—Carscallen, Carson, Henwood, Joy, Lapum, Wilson, Wallace; nays—Gibbard, Lane, Perry, Rose and Stevens.

On motion $30 was voted the Poor and Sanitary Committee.

On motion of Coun. GIBBARD, seconded by Coun. CARSON, $34.03 was ordered to be paid Coun. Henwood to cover balance due him as chairman of the Poor and Sanitary Committee.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid:—Treas. vouchers, $232.67; T. A. Huffman, $16.75; J. M. Degroff, $2; S. R. Miller, returning officer, $4; J. Storms,

The population of this city is extremely heterogeneous, being made up of people from all parts of the world. Here are to be seen representatives of the Circassian, Mongolian, African and Indian types of the human race mingling together on the streets, Chinese, Japanese, negroes, Siwaskes, Greeks, people from Alaska and Chili, Australia and Great Britain, forming a conglomeration of humanity which is in itself a study to the ethnologist and a spectacle to the "tender-foot" from the East.

The scenery here is something grand. On a clear day the snow-capped peaks of the Coast range rising above the waters of Puget Souud in majestic beauty form a beautiful contrast to the clear blue sky in the background, the whole making a picture which would delight the eye of an artist.

But I have said enough—if you don't believe me come and see for yourself. But don't come without money to invest in real estate, for if you do you will make a mistake—in fact, you will be "left" by the moneyed men of the town.

I remain, yours truly,

ALEX. KENNEDY.

WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY!

Jottings from Conversations with our Customers.

MISS M.—What a splendid store you have now. The alterations are a great improvement.

ME. D.—Well! You certainly can claim now to have the finest Shoe Store in the town. It looks exceedingly well when lighted up.

MISS MAC.—You must do an unusually large trade. I have repeatedly noticed that you are busy when others are doing nothing.

W. H., A COUNTRY MERCHANT.—Tell me how it is that you can retail these goods lower than I pay for them in Montreal.

FARMER.—I was attracted first to your store by your One Price System. I found when buying at other places that my neighbour had purchased the same goods at the same place for fifty cents a pair less than I did, because he beat down the price and I didn't.

C. C.—We have bought from you ever since you opened and have been well satisfied. You get all of our trade now and it amounts to considerable in a year, besides others that we have recommended to you.

C. FROM B.—We have come 20 miles to buy our boots from you and have saved enough on these few pairs to pay our fare several times over.

If you want any further evidence as to the right place to buy Boots and Shoes call at

The Reeve held that Schryver auditor and the council appointed Mr. Wm. Miller, jr. Mr. Robt. Perry was appointed assessor. The Reeve asked Mr. A. C. Parkes, the Clerk, for a statement of the election expenses, and he refused to the Clerk had no right to pay these accounts without submitting them to the council, and especially to appropriate to himself $6 for expenses and holding nomination, which was a part of the general duties of his office. After some other business was transacted, on motion of Mr. Post, seconded by Mr Vanalstine, Mr. Philip R. McCabe was appointed Clerk in the place of Mr. A. C. Parkes. The deposed Clerk then at the request of Dep.-Reeve Carscallen read a statement of the election accounts. The Reeve claimed the statement as the property of the council, and on motion it was deferred till next meeting for further consideration. A number of accounts were passed, after which the council adjourned.

—Roads are full. Our teacher reports a slim attendance at school, owing to the unfavorable state of roads and weather.

—Miss Julia Sharp is visiting friends in Belleville.

—Mr. W. A. Hogle is our new assessor.

—Mr. S. K. Miller is now occupying a prominent office in the County Agricultural Society.

—While returning from Bath one night last week, Mr. James F. Aylesworth was unfortunate in being upset with his wife and child. The roads were badly drifted, but by going ahead he made a track in which his horse followed easily.

—Mr. B. E. Aylesworth has again been returned to the council. The thanks of this community are due to those noble Reformers of Odessa, who worked so faithfully for him and Mr. P. E. R. Miller.

—We are much pleased to have our old friend, Squire John Sharp, in the Reeve's chair this year. His great ability, long experience and sterling integrity fit him pre-eminently for the position of Warden.

—A hoary head is a crown of glory, but we expect that a "would be" young man living east of McIntyre's, is not as firm a believer in Solomon's wisdom as we are.

WEEK'S NEWS CONDENSED.

—The total amount received for the Humber accident fund is $7,877.26.

—Inquiry into alleged irregularities preferred against Mr. C. H. Corbett, county gaoler of Frontenac, by the county council, were tried at Kingston yesterday. The report of the commissioners will, it is reported, be a complete exoneration of Mr. Corbett.

—David McKay, a prominent local politician of Rochester, N. Y., who nearly fifty years ago published a newspaper in Kingston, Ont., died last night, aged 73. He leaves a widow and grown-up family.

—The annual meeting of the Midland Central Fair Association was held in Kingston on Wednesday last. It was shown by the Directors' report that the entries of all kinds numbered 2,508, against 2,754 in 1881. While there was a difference of 246 entries in favor of the latter year, the amount paid in prize money last year was in excess of that paid in 1881 by $43. In some of the departments there has been a lack of interest, others had shown up well. There is no doubt that had the season been favorable the difference in the classes referred to between the late exhition and its predecessor of 1881 would not have existed. The revenue from all sources was $4,734.13, the disbursements $4,012.63, leaving a balance of $731 50.

—John Banwell, sewing machine agent of Picton, was crossing the bay on the 9th inst., near Minaker's Cove, when the horse broke through the ice and was drowned.

—The Globe train collided with a freight train at Mimico yesterday morning. John Clifton, engineer of the mail train, was badly injured.

—An express train drawn by two engines was derailed at Trenton last midnight. It had a dozen cars, five of them Pullmans. The latter were crowded with senators and members of parliament with their wives. The trucks were jerked out from under the second engine, and the coaches were scattered over the track in every shape. One Pullman was tipped over. No one was hurt, but the passengers were considerably shaken up. The accident was caused by the spreading of a switch, the bar being broken.

—John Davidson, aged 80, and his wife, aged 86, were found frozen to death near Newport, Tenn., to-day. They were too feeble to carry fuel, and went to bed to keep warm.

—Yesterday at Belleville Judge Lazier acquitted Thomas Parsons of the charge of assault with intent to commit highway robbery which was preferred against him.

—To-day's races at Trenton, Ont., were as follows:—

Open Trot—Little Walter, 1 1 2 1; Lookout, 3 2 1 2; J. N. Fuller, 2 3 3 3. Named Trot—Olive, 1 2 1 1; Lady Pert, 2 1 2 2; Fanning Horse, 3 3 3 3.

FRIDAY, JAN. 18.

—To-day a three-year-old child was discovered by the engineer of an approaching train firmly bound to the railway track near Columbia, S. C. The train was stopped within a yard of the destined victim.

—Edward Tappan, who is under arrest on suspicion of being implicated in the Townsend outrage, confessed this morning that his brother John and himself were concerned in the murder of Mrs. Maybee and her daughter.

—One of the boilers connected with the shoe manufactory and tannery of E. G. and E. Wallace at Rochester, N. H., blew up this afternoon, killing four men and injuring several others. The machinery was run by an engine and three boilers.

—At Kingston yesterday the male pupils of Cataraqui and Wellington streets schools had a snow-balling match after school hours, per arrangement, and had a warm contest. When snow balls had not the desired effect harder missiles were used, and the result was several got some severe cuts.

—At Trenton yesterday a young man named Wallace McMatthews, who was playing billiards in a hotel, threw a billiard ball at his opponent, with whom he had a dispute. The missile missed the man whom it was intended for and struck Wm. A. Hepburn, of Picton, behind the ear, knocking him senseless. McMatthews is missing.

She says she has had six refusals already and is in no way discouraged. I wish her success. It is no disgrace if not sacked twice in one place. I cannot understand why she gets refused, she is not particular to the age or looks. I noticed in the correspondence of last week, that the boys are waiting for a proposal from the girls. I guess they are going to wait a while. I would advise the girls to look up a professional man that does not reside within the corporation of Moscow.

A Special Invitation.

We especially invite a trial by all those sufferers from Kidney and Liver complaints who have failed to obtain relief from other remedies and from doctors. Nature's great remedy, Kidney-Wort, has effected cures in many obstinate cases. It acts at once on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleansing the system of all poisonous humors and restoring a healthy condition of those important organs. Do not be discouraged but try it.

An Important Enquiry.

Are you threatened with Consumption? If so, the cause may be in the blood. Impure blood and Scrofula are close companions, and Scrofula and Consumption are still closer related. Burdock Blood Bitters cure all forms of Scrofula by cleansing the blood and regulating the secretions.

If you are bilious or have indigestion, sick headache or dizziness, try Baxter's Mandrake Bitters, used instead of pills; they cure constipation. Price, 25c. per bottle. For sale by all druggists. 8-4.

The pleasant full-toned voice faltered a little over the last words ; but the blue eyes never wavered, nor shrank from Lord de Gretton's mocking and malignant glance. Arthur's one thought now was to shield the miserable girl who was so manifestly incapable of taking her own part. Some inner instinct warned him that Lord de Gretton's wife would have no easy path to tread ; and, since no earthly power could break the chain she had so rashly forged, he could only pity her with an intense unselfish pity, and inwardly swear that he would do nothing to make her hard path harder still.

Lord de Gretton was a clever man of the world, quite keen enough to know truth from falsehood and see through the finest histrionic display. He did not for an instant doubt that the man before him was speaking absolute truth, that Nora had believed him dead ; but his conviction was anything but soothing to his pride. Innocently or not, they had injured and aggrieved him, had wounded his sensitive vanity, and compelled him, the haughty and impassive Lord de Gretton, to play the ridiculous part of the gray-haired husband.

Jealous and deceived, he stared at Arthur Beaupre, his deeply-sunken eyes glittering angrily, his pale face actually flushing as he entertained the galling thought. Could Lady Olivia but have known it, all wrongs were fully avenged in that moment of bitterest mortification.

...cton was the first to speak,
...glancing at Arthur, his cold glitter-

"Lady de Gretton, you will follow me."

He spoke with the abrupt harshness of a master addressing a slave who had fallen under his displeasure ; but no answering flush arose on the wife's pale face ; harshness and gentleness were one to her now. The worst that could come to her had come ; she was alike past fear and hope. She did not, even by a deeper-drawn breath or the quiver of an eyelid, give any sign that she had heard her lord's command or intended to obey it. She stood like one turned to stone, staring out over the wide waste of water, from which the last touch of sunlight had fled.

"Will you come ?" Lord de Gretton muttered grimly ; and the light of the sunken eyes grew more and more dangerously cruel. He bent his head till his gray moustache swept the soft girlish face, and whispered with hissing emphasis in the small ear, "Are you mad, to defy me now ?"

She shivered slightly, drew a pace or two away, and for the last time her eyes sought Arthur Beaupre's in wild and pitiful appeal.

The look pierced Lord de Gretton's armour of cool self-possession and stung him to jealous fury. He knew that the girl he had wooed and won brought him

She shivered slightly, drew a pace or two away, and for the last time her eyes sought Arthur Beaupre's in wild and pitiful appeal.

The look pierced Lord de Gretton's armour of cool self-possession and stung him to jealous fury. He knew that the girl he had wooed and won brought him no love as her marriage dowry. So much she had frankly told him from the first, and the confession had but made him the more determined that she should be his. He was so used to be wooed that the girl's unfeigned reluctance to accept his wooing gave her a novel and piquant attraction in his sight. He had heard the whole story of her first unhappy love from Cristine Singleton's truthful lips, and could afford generously to overlook the fact of a dead lover; but now was the lover really dead, or was Nora doubly false?

The suave polish of his manner covered a brutal nature, and in the rare moments of agitation he permitted himself the brutality rose to the surface, as now. He seized the slender wrist with cruel force, and swung the girl round with a savage suddenness that wrung a passionate word from Arthur Beaupre's lips and a wild cry from hers—

"Arthur, Arthur, save me—save me from him!"

Then, and not till then, Arthur Beaupre broke the silence so hardly maintained. He came forward, very white and stern-looking, and stood before the cruelly-united pair, his worn young beauty a sharp and terrible contrast to the jealous age confronting him. How fervently he prayed that the right words might come to him now, that he might close, and not widen the breach between these two, and help, not harm, the unhappy girl for whom his heart bled?

"Hush, Nora!" he said almost sternly, though he would have given his life to speak one word of comfort in her ear, to drive the dreadful frenzied look from her dark eyes. Then, turning to Lord de Gretton, he said eagerly, with all his honest heart in the words, "Lord de Gretton, permit me to explain all that seems strange to you now——"

But Lord de Gretton cut the sentence short; wheeling round upon his heel, he stared insolently into the frank blue eyes, and said slowly, with a sneer, while he twisted the ends of his long gray moustache into sharp points—

"So you will have it then—will thrust

Lord de Gretton was a clever man of the world, quite keen enough to know truth from falsehood and see through the finest histrionic display. He did not for an instant doubt that the man before him was speaking absolute truth, that Nora had believed him dead; but his conviction was anything but soothing to his pride. To recognize a wrong was, with Lord de Gretton, to resolve to revenge it. He ground his teeth together with savage energy, and vowed within himself that one of the offenders at least—the one who was helplessly and absolutely in his power—should receive exemplary punishment at his hands, so, returning Arthur's eager beseeching look with a coolly insolent stare, he said, in slow drawling tones that fell with maddening distinctness on the young man's ear—

"I suppose, for my own sake, as well as Lady de Gretton's, I had best accept this explanation."

"It is the true one; you cannot, dare not doubt it!" Arthur cried hotly, all the fiery pride he tried so hard for Nora's sake to curb to meeknesa flaming now from his bright blue eyes and ringing defiantly in the clear young voice.

"I have said I shall accept it," the other returned, with exaggerated emphasis and a cruel enjoyment of the pain he gave—"but upon certain conditions only."

He paused, looking keenly into the other's face, as awaiting a response; but Arthur merely bowed, not trusting himself to speak.

"First, you, or we, must leave this place at once; it is not large enough to hold the trio."

"I return to town to-night."

"Good. In the second place, you must promise that you will never seek Lady de Gretton's company again."

"Pardon me," the young man interrupted, with uncontrollable haughtiness, "I have never sought Lady de Gretton's company. I believed the lady to be still Miss Bruce."

and swung the girl round with a savage suddenness that wrung a passionate word from Arthur Beaupre's lips and a wild cry from hers—

"Arthur, Arthur, save me—save me from him!"

Then, and not till then, Arthur Beaupre broke the silence so hardly maintained. He came forward, very white and stern-looking, and stood before the cruelly-united pair, his worn young beauty a sharp and terrible contrast to the jealous age confronting him. How fervently he prayed that the right words might come to him now, that he might close, and not widen the breach between these two, and help, not harm, the unhappy girl for whom his heart bled?

"Hush, Nora!" he said almost sternly, though he would have given his life to speak one word of comfort in her ear, to drive the dreadful frenzied look from her dark eyes. Then, turning to Lord de Gretton, he said eagerly, with all his honest heart in the words, "Lord de Gretton, permit me to explain all that seems strange to you now——"

But Lord de Gretton cut the sentence short; wheeling round upon his heel, he stared insolently into the frank blue eyes, and said slowly, with a sneer, while he twisted the ends of his long gray moustache into sharp points—

"So you will have it then—will thrust yourself into the fereground, and be seen! Your companion has little cause to thank you. I wished to ignore Lady de Gretton's escapade, to close my eyes to the awkward fact that my wife, on her wedding-day, wandered out at sunset to entertain her old lover; but you will not let me."

Clear, cold, and cruel, each word fell with sharp distinctness, and stung, as it was intended to sting, not the pale girl round whose overwrought brain a merciful mist was gathering, who heard all that was said in a dull uncomprehending fashion, as though it concerned her not at all—not Nora, but the man who would—how gladly!—have died to defend her.

"For shame!" he cried, with a hearty ringing scorn that would to a more generous opponent have been a convincing proof of his honesty and good faith, but only stung Lord de Gretton's pride sharply, and moved him to a more implacable hate. "Oh"—Arthur flung back his bright head, impatient of his own halting utterance—"where shall I find the words to convince you, if your own knowledge of her innocence and spotless purity be not enough? Nora, tell your husband how you met me here; for his sake and your own, do not leave him under an impression so cruelly false."

Nora started at the direct appeal, but only turned her eyes with a vague troubled stare from one to the other; her lips moved a little, but no sound came from them. Arthur's heart sank within him. Had her brain really turned with its weight of trouble?

from his bright blue eyes and ringing defiantly in the clear young voice.

"I have said I shall accept it," the other returned, with exaggerated emphasis and a cruel enjoyment of the pain he gave—"but upon certain conditions only."

He paused, looking keenly into the other's face, as awaiting a response; but Arthur merely bowed, not trusting himself to speak.

"First, you, or we, must leave this place at once; it is not large enough to hold the trio."

"I return to town to-night."

"Good. In the second place, you must promise that you will never seek Lady de Gretton's company again."

"Pardon me," the young man interrupted, with uncontrollable haughtiness, "I have never sought Lady de Gretton's company. I believed the lady to be still Miss Bruce."

Lord de Gretton, twisting his gray moustache with elaborate care, listened with his most supercilious smile, as though gently tolerating an interruption that in no way influenced the predetermined current of his thoughts and speech.

"Just so," he said, with a nod of careless condescension that made Arthur's quick blood boil again; "and being better informed now, you will understand that your paths diverge widely from this moment and need never touch again."

"I understand," Arthur returned coldly; and, with a smile of quiet satisfaction, Lord de Gretton turned to his wife.

"Come, Nora," he said authoritatively, "it is time for us to go."

He lifted the little hand that hung so listlessly by her side, and drew it within his arm; the contact chilled his fingers; death itself was not more icy or inert. Nora neither resisted nor aided his efforts; the only sign of life left in her blazed in the burning misery of her eyes.

Mechanically she permitted herself to be drawn towards the path she had descended, ignorant of that last bitter drop still to mingle with her cup—mechanically, without another word or look, she would have passed the man who watched her with an intense and yearning pity that for the moment swallowed up all selfish pain. But, crossing his path, Lord de Gretton paused abruptly, unable to deny himself a Parthian dart.

"As you two are old friends, and must part for ever," he said, with mocking emphasis, "you may be allowed the luxury of a farewell word. Nay, Mr. Beaupre, you are most ungrateful; few men in my position would show such magnanimity as this."

For something like a smothered execration broke at last from Arthur Beaupre's white lips. He was heart-sick and weary of the fiendish cruelty with which this man revenged himself and revelled in his power to torture them. With one look, eloquent of scorn and disgust, he would have turned away, merely bowing and not daring to trust himself to speak.

But at that moment, moved by some vague impulse, Nora raised her eyes to his, the lovely Irish gray eyes in whose cleartruthful depths he had seen every thought and every fancy mirrored in the happy days gone by. Where now were the innocent love, the innocent mirth, the gay girlish sparkle? Something rose in his throat and seemed as though it would strangle him—something that mastered his manhood and brought a mist of tears to dim his vision as he met that blank, hopeless, lost, and miserable gaze.

"Lost!" Yes, that thought sent the last worst pang of all to Arthur Beaupre's loyal and generous heart. Rather would he have seen any intensity of conscious pain than the suggested frenzy of that gaze. She did not seem to know, or rather she seemed to look through him, as though no object stood in her path. Her widely-opened eyes were those of a sleep-walker, haunted by a torturing dream and utterly unconscious of all that was passing around her.

At any cost she must be aroused from this dangerous apathy. Arthur took the cold little hand in his and spoke entreatingly—

"Nora, it is good-bye indeed, now. Heaven bless and shield you, and make you happy!"

She shivered slightly, and he saw her lips twitch; but she repeated the "good-bye" mechanically, and her eyes never softened, though the tears stood thickly in his.

Lord de Gretton made an impatient gesture, and the spell that held Arthur Beaupre was broken. Silently he drew back, and let the married pair pass him; silently he watched them as they made their way up the winding road, now vanishing, now reappearing, as they passed from terrace to terrace up the well-wooded height until they were lost to sight among the tall trees that closed in around the picturesque white house at which Lord de Gretton's honeymoon was to be spent.

Once only Nora turned her graceful head and looked back—and that look was destined to haunt Arthur Beaupre's fancy with cruel pertinacity for many and many a week to come—will haunt him with more or less of horror in the remembrance until he has done with earth and earthly things for ever.

With a little shiver, for the night-air began to grow chill, and he was still weak from recent illness, Arthur pulled his soft hat down over his brows, drew up his coat-collar, and, resolutely fixing his thoughts on the future and turning his

I was with a fatiguing day, because he could get none himself, and went downstairs, where I have no doubt he found refuge in his precious books."

Cristine made no further comment; after all, it made little difference to her whether her step-father made his appearance or not She had plenty to occupy her thoughts, but unfortunately the food she herself had given them was less entirely sweet now than she had imagined it last night.

Then she had been entirely absorbed in the thought of the ample revenge she had taken upon the girl who had outshone her in every way. With something like an intoxication of delight, she had pictured Nora opening her present and reading the news it contained, pictured the utter horror of the bride of a day when her old lover rose before her triumphantly confident in her truth, and when she had to tell him that with her own hands she had raised up a barrier between them.

The little drama played out on the stage of Cristine's fancy had seemed entirely satisfactory and entertaining last night; amid thunders of applause the curtain had fallen upon a picturesque tableau of her triumph and Nora's crushing defeat—the denouement had been pleasantly complete.

But somehow the brilliant picture faded a little in the colder morning light—disagreeable after-thoughts began to intrude on the girl's mind and fill her with selfish terrors. Now that the intense and irritating jealousy that urged her on to any lengths and blinded her to all but the immediate consequences of her acts had passed into the back-ground, she began to see with alarming sharpness some serious self-made difficulties in her path.

For what happened to Lady de Gretton she cared not one straw. She knew how sure and cruel was the blow she had dealt; the victim might recover from it or die of it, if she chose. But she did care very much what happened to herself; and a spectral army of ugly possibitities paraded menacingly before her till she began to wish, not exactly that the blow had not been struck, but that she herself had figured somewhat less prominently as the avenging angel

"What a fool I was to write that letter!" she thought, knitting her fair brows and tapping her smart French slipper impatiently on the floor. "She would have known without a word that I had planned it all, and I should not be in her power, as I am now. Of course she will show it to Arthur in self-defence, and then he will never speak to me again; or she may send it to the governor, and then, quiet as he is, this house will hardly hold us both. Once only Nora turned her graceful head and looked back—and that look was destined to haunt Arthur Beaupre's fancy with cruel pertinacity for many and many a week to come—will haunt him with more or less of horror in the remembrance until he has done with earth and earthly things for ever.

With a little shiver, for the night-air began to grow chill, and he was still weak from recent illness, Arthur pulled his soft hat down over his brows, drew up his coat-collar, and, resolutely fixing his thoughts on the future and turning his back upon the scene of so much misery, made his way to the railway station, and was soon on his way to London.

He had travelled incessantly lately, long and far that day; but, weak as he was, he seemed incapable of physical fatigue. He tried to sleep; but his thoughts centred persistently in the place he had left, in the girl he had deserted in her misery.

The one fear that overrode all other in his thoughts was that Nora's brain would turn under the accumulating troubles that had come upon her. He could endure to lose her, to see her happy with another, he thought, with a little tightening of the generous heart that could ignore its own sharp pain; but he had left her in merciless hands, and there had been something like the wild glare of madness in that last backward look.

"Heaven keep her safe and sane!" he cried again and again, with a sort of reverential passion, as he leant his aching head against the carriage window, and looked out with sad unseeing eyes on the soft beauty of the starlit summer night.

And, while the fervent prayer still echoed in his heart, Nora de Gretton knelt by her dead husband's side, with blood on her little white hands and on her pretty velvet dress, blood that ran in a long cruel stream along the white rug on which he had fallen—that followed a knife-thrust through his heart, and with which his life had ebbed away.

CHAPTER IX.

"How late the governor is this morning!" Cristine Singleton cried, looking up with a prolonged yawn from the letter she had been indifferently scanning as her mother came into the room. "Is he down-stairs yet?"

"What a question!" Mrs. Bruce answered, with a laugh, as she took her place at the well-spread break-fast table, and eagerly turned the envelopes on her plate, only to put them aside with a disappointed—

"No letter from Vance again! What can the boy be doing?"

"Getting into mischief, of course!" Cristine said sharply. "But never mind Vance, mother; I asked you whether the governor had come down."

Of course she will show it to Arthur in self-defence, and then he will never speak to me again; or she may send it to the governor, and then, quiet as he is, this house will hardly hold us both. Oh, dear, I have made a horrible mess of it, look which way I will!"

"Do come to breakfast, child; you look quite pinched and wan with hunger," Mrs. Bruce broke in with a brisk cheerfulness that seemed horribly incongruous to Christine; and as the girl mechanically obeyed her summons and drew a chair to the table, she turned to the servant, who still lingered at the sideboard, with the careless question—

"Where is your master, Finnis? Does he know we are at breakfast?"

"He is in the library, ma'am, and I rang the bell twenty minutes ago."

"Perhaps he has gone out," Mrs. Bruce suggested, looking across at her daughter, with the slight contemptuous smile she was wont to bestow upon her husband's unpunctual habits.

But the man negatived this idea decisively.

"Oh, no, ma'am! I took him in a telegram a little while back, and he has not left the room since then, I know."

"A telegram!" Cristine repeated, pushing back her chair, and turning a ghastly hue, horrible to look upon. "Mother, their must be something wrong."

Mrs. Bruce felt by no means comfortable herself; some of the superstitious dread that oppressed her daughter seemed suddenly to pass to her, driving the healthy color from her face and making her clear voice husky and unsteady; but she felt, if only to impress the listening servant, that a sharp rebuke was necesssary, and administered it with sufficient dignity and promptitude..

Church Debts.

What an outcry s ordinarily made about church debts! They are generally referred to as an evidence that there is a very great deal of depravity in the churches, or nothing of the kind would ever be allowed. Some church dignitaries have set their faces so firmly against anything of the kind, as to positively refuse to have to do with the dedication of any church not entirely paid for. Of course two-thirds of the "of the world" applaud any such decision as the just and right thing. One "eminent man" has lately taken a good deal of pains to remark, as a most singular thing, that all the leading denominations have a strange habit of rushing in debt. If not in debt already they are surely about to launch themselves into the deep sea. He does not say it outright that all this is very wicked, but that this is the inference.

There are surely two sides to this question. As a matter of fact a large proportion of the very fine churches that now adorn the country would be much smaller, much less comfortable, and much less creditable in appearance than they are today, if those who had to do with their erection had resolved not to go into debt. In a growing progressive country, such as ours is, there are few localities able and willing to command sufficient money for church building purposes to meet the growing requirements of the next twenty years. The churches determined not to provide anything more than they can now pay for, may stand on a very solid foundation, but is it probable they will find room to grow with the growth of wealth and population around them? Our church debts have not been an unmixed evil, by any means. The wonder is that the outcry against them has been so universally raised.

Emerson says : "The way to make the world better is by reforming number one, then there is surely one less villain in the world."

PERSONAL.

In Mr. Spurgeon's fund of illustrative stories is one of a man who use to say to his wife:—"Mary, go to church and pray for us both." But the man dreamed one night that when he and his wife got to the gate of heaven, Peter said:—"Mary, go in for both." He awoke and made up his mind that it was time to become a Christian on his own account.

Several relics of Sir Joshua Reynolds will be see at the forthcoming exhibition of his works at the Grosvenor Gallery, in London—among them his silver spectacles snuffbox of tortoise shell, trimmed with gold, and the three pen and ink sketches which first attracted attention to his precocious powers, one a little picture of a perch, drawn from life; next a little interior of a library, copied "with all the minuteness and delicacy of Cello, or Cella Bella," and third, a perspective on the back of a Latin theme, done when he was only eight years old.

It is stated that Millais, the painter, is to be made a baronet. He has sufficient property qualification, being worth a million dollars, and is earning a large yearly income. He will be the first painter baronet, as Tennyson has been the first poet peer. Mr. Millais's only sister is the wife of Mr. Lester Wallack. There has been various painter knights like Reynolds, Lawrence, and Sir F. Leighton.

Prince George of Wales, says the London World, is proving himself a real "salt." He is the pet of officers and crew of H. M. S. Canada, and though not backward in his studies or other then conscientious in his duties, he is healthy, hardy, and just a little mischievous. He takes the rough with the smooth without losing his head or temper, and his ruddy, free, and well-set limbs are to be seen first in every kind of sport.

The publication of Lord Lytton's Autobiography moves a correspondent of the London Daily News to remind the public that Lady Lytton lived for many years at Sydenham in comparative poverty, latterly attended by one servant, and assisted by friends; that she died in March, 1882, and was buried at Shirley, near Croydon. No monument marks the grave, but a new "Communion Table" has been presented by friends as a tribute to her memory. Her will was proved, and effects sold; but the proceeds were insufficient to pay her trifling debts.

A monument to the memory of Mozart is about to be erected at Vienna, a century after the maestro's death. The death of Richard Wagner is said to have prompted the erection of this monument. Only a Baby.

One sultry day last summer, at a time when children of the poorer class in Philadelphia were dying by the scores every week, a bloated old man staggered up the steps of a physician's dwelling. The boys shouted after him, "Old Bourbon," the name by which he had been known in the locality in which he lived for many years.

"The baby's worse," he said, standing hat in hand when he met the doctor coming out.

"You've been here for me every day for a week," explained the doctor. "I cannot go again to-day. I told the child's mother there was no chance this morning. It was dying then."

"Won't you come now?"

"No; I have not a minute to spare. There are patients waiting whom I can help."

"Old Bourbon" followed him to his carriage door, twisting his rag of a hat in his shaking hands. "She's—she's all I've got, doctor."

But the doctor, with a pitying nod, drove away, and the old man, nearly sobered by his keen distress, crept home to the little attic where his little grandchild lay dying. Whatever nursing or kindness little Mary had known, had come from "Old Bourbon." Her mother had six other children, and went out washing every day. The poor old drunkard and the innocent baby were left to form a strange friendship for each other. She called for him now feebly, as she lay on her mother's lap.

"Daddy! Daddy! Come to me!"

And then her spirit passed on to the unseen.

"Why, is this you, Bour—— I beg your pardon. What is your real name?"

"John Black, sir. I want to take my name again. I'm thinkin' of signin' the pledge 'n' pullin' up for the rest of the time left," stammered the poor wretch.

The clergyman was wise and helpful. John did "pull up." He lived but a few months after that, but he did what he could to live a decent, honest, Christian life in that time.

"The Lord is merciful, John," his friend said to him, as he lay dying.

"I know it, sir. I'm not much acquainted with Him. But I've been tryin' to foller little Mary. I hear her always cryin', 'Daddy, come to me.' I'm comin'. An' I reckon He'll not turn me back."

Even the baby had its work to do, and had done it.

This may be true ; but why, ask Wagner's friends, is it only now that such a cry is raised to immortalize the composer ?

Oscar Wilde has had a bad time in his native Dublin, The Gaiety Theatre is small, but twice too large for the accommodation of those who went to see and hear the original Bunthorne. Even of those many remained not to pray, but to carry out their original intention of scoffing. They laughed at his dress, his attitudes, his sentiments, and his language. His manner of meeting interruptions was rather effective. He simply came to a dead halt in the middle of a sentence, and waited till his critics felt themselves the object of general attention. whereupon they held their peace.

America and Liquor Drinking.

It appears that the Germans are not the largest consumers of beer and other malt liquors, as has generally been supposed. The editor of the Chemical Review, of Chicago, has collected the statistics in regard to brewing from most of the leading countries in the world. From a table published in that journal it appears that the production of beer in the German Empire amounts to 92 quarts per head. A large portion of this beer is exported, however. In the Austrian Empire the production of beer amounts to 34 quarts per inhabitant. In Great Britain each inhabitant is credited with 115 quarts of very strong beer. In United States the production of beer per inhabitant is 40 quarts. In Denmark it is 117 quarts, in Belgium 71, in France 24, in the Netherlands 51, in Norway 43, in Sweden 40, in Switzerland 39. In Russia only 4 quarts of beer are manufactured for each inhabitant, while the production in Italy is but the tenth part of that amount. Apparently malt liquors are not manufactured in Spain, Portugal, Greece, and Turkey. In most wine-producing countries the consumption of malt liquors is very small. In Russia distilled liquors are principally drank. The three Scandinavian countries consume large quantities of both fermented and distilled liquors. The consumption of beer and other malt liquors is increasing faster in the United States than in any other country in the world. The consumption, however, is chiefly limited to the Northern States. In the States south of the Ohio River there are very few breweries and little demand for them. New York, Pennsylvania, and the States west of them produce nearly all the beer made in the entire country.—Evening Standard

Getting there, he found that his valise, containing his vestments, which had come by the train which he should have taken, was locked up in the station, and it took some time to find the station master, who had the key. Getting out his vestments, he ran to the church, where the services was under way, but thought it necessary to have a drink of water before beginning his duties. The only man presumably able to get the water was the organ blower, and he could only go for it on condition that the Bishop took his place at the bellows. Even then no water could be obtained, and the Bishop undertook the service with his throat full of dust. When it was over, by some misunderstanding, there was no carriage in waiting to take him to the house where he was to spend the night, and he had to ride thither in a fish waggon. The horse ran away and upset him into the gutter.

"Oh, yes," said the clerk, brightening uy, "I'll accept an situation."

BLACK KNOT.—This disease which attacks cherry and plum trees, especially, is the work of a fungus plant called Spæria morbosa, which is propagated by spores or seeds, and spreads in the young wood by its thread-like roots. These cause warty excrescences several inches long on the sides af the branches, which are greenish and soft during the early part of summer, and attract the curculio to deposit its eggs therein, especially when stone fruit is scarce. Other larvæ have also at times been found in these green knots, and this gave rise to the opinion at one time held that insects were the cause of the mischief. It is found, however, that the disease originates under the bark, where insects can have no access. The spores of this fungus are said to ripen on the diseased trees during the winter, and there is no doubt that the disease is contagious. The only remedy is to cut and burn the infected twigs, cutting well down into the healthy wood, as the roots of the fungus extend a considerable distance beyond the excrescence.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Tolman Wheeler of Chicago, who has given about $70,000 to religious corporations, has set apart a piece of land on Washington Boulevard near California street for a theological seminary, and to it he will add $1,000,000 for the buildings and $100,000 for the endowment of the seminary.

The American politicians are at their wits end what to do to stamp out polygamy. A woman has just announced that she knows how the death blow could be given to it right off. She would establish fashionable millinery shops, with fashionable prices, out at Salt Lake city, and the crisis must come. The plan looks feasible enough to every married man of TRUTH's acquaintance. How have all those bald headed reprobates escaped this danger heretofore? Can some one explain. That woman's ingenuity may yet save the nation.

The Christian Guardian is about as hard hitting at opponents as are the ordinary sinners of the political press, when the circumstance appear to call for it, and it is rather facetious too. Writing of the claim now being made for more state aid to University College after a pretty large sum has been swallowed up, the Guardian relieves itself in this style: "The cry is, 'Give, give.' This reply, which is deemed sufficient to silence the voice of complaint, reminds us of the story of a Mormon preacher, who was baptizing some converts in a hole in the ice of a river. One man was accidentally caught by the current and carried under. Nothing daunted, the elder said, 'that fellow has gone under, bring on another.' But the others were not disposed to try it. And it is very likely when our University friends say, 'that endowment has been largely wasted, bring on another,' that Ontario may just hesitate before bringing on another."

It is a common thing to speak of the old aristocratic system of England and other old monarchal countries as producing a system of large land owners and very wealthy persons such as would never be found in connection with a republic. As a matter of fact this idea turns out to be a very great mistake. Under the old land system the monopoly may remain much longer in favored families; but single individuals cannot and do not grow wealthy nearly as quick. One principal reason for all this may be that in an old country there are fewer persons of a fair amount of means to be fleeced, and consequently the fleecing cannot be nearly so profitable. In the United States, just now, the number of millionaires grows wonderfully and the millionaires are amassing such wealth as the old world never heard of. Of course the proportionate

BODY SNATCHING.

A Doctor's Exciting Adventure at a Cleveland Cemetery—He Narrowly Escapes being Killed.

"What are the duties of a demonstrator of anatomy?" This question was propounded yesterday by a Leader reporter, who has noticed that this position was invariably filled by a young doctor with very little experience.

"To steal bodies," was the reply of the old practitioner of whom the question was asked. "It is very seldom that an old-established physician will consent to do such work, and the position is therefore given to young men who are anxious to get along in the profession. I used to be demonstrator of anatomy at one of the city colleges. It was different then than now, and the business was attended with much more danger than at present. I was pretty fortunate, however, in having some good friends in office, and always escaped arrest."

"Did you have any thrilling adventures?"

"Yes, indeed. On several occasions I had pretty close calls. I shall never forget one night at Woodland Cemetery. I went with the janitor of the college to get a body. We made our way into the cemetery without being noticed, and, having located the grave, set to work. The janitor handled the pick and shovel while I did the watching. He worked away for some time, and the thud of his pick and the grating of his shovel were the only sounds that broke the ghostly stillness. I had become somewhat neglectful of my vigil, and was not paying much attention to my surroundings. All of a sudden, from behind the tree where I was hidden, I saw the janitor drop his shovel and break into a run. I looked around to see what had caused his flight, and saw two men approaching me. I knew they were the cemetery watchmen, and not fancying the idea of being caught, I followed the janitor's example and started to run. I headed for Woodland avenue and thought if I could outrun the watchmen I could get away without trouble. Just before I reached the fence, a board affair—that was before the iron fence was built—I saw that the me were trying to head me off. I strained every nerve and tried to clear the fence at one jump. My feet struck the top board and I fell back into the cemetery. Regaining my feet and taking a new start, I made another jump. My feet struck the top again and I was balancing myself to throw my body over on the sidewalk when one of the wachmen shot at me. The bullet whistled past my ear, and I fell off the fence. The men doubtless thought I was dead, for they did not come to the fence, and I soon crawled away and escaped.

In the United States, just now, the number of millionaires grows wonderfully and the millionaires are amassing such wealth as the old world never heard of. Of course the proportionate number of really poor increases as well. A careful observer says that if the entire wealth of a country should be equally divided among the whole of the people this year in ten years time some would be a good deal richer and many others a good deal poorer because of such a distribution. The observation is no doubt correct.

Consumption of Beer in the Paris Hospitals.

As some answer to the protests which have been made against his peremptory prohibition of beer for the patients of the hospitals, the Director of the Assistance Publique publishes some of the figures, which have justified as he thinks, his too indiscriminate resolution. It seems that the quantity of beer consumed at the Hotel Dieu rose from 37 litres in 1875 to 13,516 in 1882; at the Pitie from 700 to 8,995; at the Charite from 1,876 to 13,473; and at the St. Antoine from 3,768 to 14,546. The whole of the hospital establishments consumed 28,695 litres in 1875 and 151,174 in 1882. The consumption of vin ordinaire (which has the reputation of being very good in the Paris hospitals) rose from 1,893,128 litres in 1875 to 2,686,728 in 1882; that of Banyuls wine rose from 56,881 litres to 128,584, and Bordeaux from 78,814 litres to 103,988. There were also 1,130,531 litres of milk consumed in 1875, and 2,675,699 in 1882. The increase in the consumption in beer, therefore, has not been caused by its substitution for wine or milk, the beer being an absolute addition. "But who drank all this beer?" asked one of the municipal councillors. "That I cannot tell," replied M. Quentin, "though it is certain that all these supplementary quantities did not profit the patients."—Medical Times and Gazette.

The G. T. R.

The Grand Trunk Railway is evidently very enterprising and successful in extending its connections in all directions. A good proportion of the former short independent lines in this country are now absorbed by it, and in Michigan it is said to control more miles of road than any railway in the State except the Michigan Central. In the States farther on West, as well as in the several New England States, its influence is every

The bullet whistled past my ear, and I fell off the fence. The men doubtless thought I was dead, for they did not come to the fence, and I soon crawled away and escaped.

"I once went down in the country with several other men after a body," continued the doctor. "We found the grave all right and dug down to the coffin, which it was necessary to break open. We had brought along an old coat to lay over it, so that the blows of the hammer would be deadened. This was placed on the coffin, and one of the men went down and began pounding. In a few minutes the grave was filled with a blue sulphurous light, and a thin spiral of smoke began to ascend. What little superstition there was in our natures asserted itself. The man in the grave hastily got out, and we stood around the pit horror-struck. The idea of anything supernatural was soon discarded, however, and we began to advance theories as to the cause of the strange light. One suggested that it might be an infernal machine that would soon explode. We then scattered, and waited to see the ground rend asunder. No explosion occurred, however, and finally some one advanced the theory that there might have been some matches in the pocket of the coat. That was found to be the case, and the blows of the hammer had ignited them. But you can imagine how we felt to see that grave suddenly lighted up in that peculiar manner."

"Did you get the body?"

"Oh, yes. It weighed nearly two hundred pounds, and it was a hard job to get it out, but we got it to Cleveland."

"You say the business was more dangerous then than now?"

"Yes; you see at that time the medical colleges had no legal right to any body, and if doctors were found with one in their possession they were liable to arrest. It is different now. The law provides that the body of paupers who have no friends shall be turned over to medical colleges on demand. The demonstrators of anatomy can at present, therefore, get plenty of bodies for the asking, while in my time a prison or may be death stared us in the face when we started out in our expeditions."—Cleveland Leader.

The consumption of vin ordinaire (which has the reputation of being very good in the Paris hospitals) rose from 1,893,128 litres in 1875 to 2,686,728 in 1882 ; that of Banyuls wine rose from 56,881 litres to 128,-584, and Bordeaux from 78,814 litres to 103,988. There were also 1,130,531 litres of milk consumed in 1875, and 2,675,699 in 1882. The increase in the consumption in beer, therefore, has not been caused by its substitution for wine or milk, the beer being an absolute addition. "But who drank all this beer ?" asked one of the municipal councillors. "That I cannot tell," replied M. Quentin, "though it is certain that all these supplementary quantities did not profit the patients."—Medical Times and Gazette.

The G. T. R.

The Grand Trunk Railway is evidently very enterprising and successful in extending its connections in all directions. A good proportion of the former short independent lines in this country are now absorbed by it, and in Michigan it is said to control more miles of road than any railway in the State except the Michigan Central. In the States farther on West, as well as in the several New England States, its influence is every year extending. Some very intelligent people are very much of opinion that too many of the numerous terrible accidents and other mishaps so constantly taking place on the Grand Trunk occur in consequence of there now being entirely too much control, and too much road, in the hands of a single set of leading officers, thereby necessitating too much responsibility in the hands of mere under-strappers. What the public would like to see on the part of the Grand Trunk is more enterprise and success in establishing double tracks along its main lines of tavel. These come too slowly for the public safety. Hurry up, gentlemen ; the Grand Trunk is much behind most of the leading American roads in this respect.

The Difference.

In Europe a woman begins her social career after her marriage, and is a greater belle at forty than at twenty. She is supposed to have acquired some ideas, to be a more agreeable person at the latter age, and is more sought for as a personage at all dinners, balls and entertainments. In America she is too often ignored at that age, and called passe.

Laboring and Managing.

Some old fashioned notions about the value of example have induced managers of mechanical establishments to become shop hands and to spend their time among their workmen as one of themselves, sharing their employments. To a certain extent such a practice, occasionally, may have a beneficial effect on the workmen without injury to the business. But there are cares and duties connected with the successful prosecution of any business that are not wholly those of the employes. A business must be managed as certainly as the work must be done, and it requires an unusually versatile man who can be one of his own workmen and their own manager at the same time. If to these dual duties he adds that of the proper oversight of his financial and general out-shop business, he must be a rare man to make a success. It may be a matter of personal pride to be able to boast like Bounderby, Gradgrind's friend, but it may be a costly indulgence ; for draughting, correspondence, and reception of customers, the overlooking of bills, and the supervision of books as much demand the care and eye of the master as the direct guidance of the workmen. This last can be delegated to a salaried foreman, or to a first-class workman, with an addition to his pay for responsibility ; but the others cannot be safely left to any but the proprietor himself.

" To-day is yours ; to-morrow may belong to others." What are you giving us? Won't to-morrow be hours also ?

Pin works are now being established in Galt, Ont., and will soon be in operation. They are owned by Messrs. Cant, Gouslay, & Co.

Miss Catharine Miller, aged 35, a milliner, doing business in Toronto, committed suicide by throwing herself off a high bridge at Rosedale. She was insane at the time.

The Canada Steel Company, of Londonderry, Nova Scotia, is in the hands of official liquidators. The business will be carried on pending the settlement of the financial difficulties.

Rev. A. J. Bray, of the Congregational Church, Montreal, has sent in his resignation, and intends to devote himself to colonization and other secular pursuits. He has not been as successful in his ministerial work as his friends expected.

A Montreal paper says that in consequence of the heavy church debts on Notre Dame and St. Patrick's churches (Roman Catholic) of that city the respective pastors have requested the Bishop to grant permission to petition the Legislature to come to their aid.

Ontario has under license 18,000 square miles, paying the Government $547,000 for timber dues and ground rent. Quebec has 48,500 square miles under license, giving a gross revenue to the Province of $668,596, so that Ontario receives, in the form of revenue, $30,000 per square mile, while Quebec gets only $14.

The Canada Pacific Railway now has now in operation 3,500 miles of telegraph wires, radiating from Winnipeg as follows: A triple wire to Brandon, a double wire to the summit of the Rockies, a double wire to Port Arthur, and a single wire to Manitou, Neche, Stonewall, and West Selkirk.

The first newspaper published north of the St. Lawrence was the Quebec Gazette, the initial number of which came out in 1776. Seventeen years after, the pioneer paper of Upper Canada appeared. It was called the Upper Canada Gazette, or American Oracle, and was published at Newark, now Niagara. Col. Wylie, the father of the Canadian press, notes that the introduction of the printing press in Canada and the abolition of slavery in Canada occurred about the same time—an interesting though not remarkable coincidence.

Money has now become so scarce, and times so dull, that a good many men are more thoughtful than they were a few weeks ago. "In time of adversity consider" is a wise remark of the wise man. Hundreds and hundreds of our ambitious business men see how foolish it has all turned out to lock up so much of their money in speculations in Nurthwest lands. Of course, they did not intend to lock their money up there, but it is locked up all the same, and much of it must necessarily remain so possibly for years to come. Three or four years ago Manitoba speculation was the rage and many speculators saw millions in it, because some of their friends had been there and made thousands, or tens of thousands. What a rush there was! Of course, things have much changed now, and men who expected to see their money returned with handsome profits in a few months at most, must spend years of patient waiting and watching. We have nc means of knowing how many millions of old Canada capital is now locked up in western land investments, but there is certainly enough to have a serious effect in making our hard times much worse at home than they would have otherwise been. However, all that cannot be avoided now. It is just barely possible that the same men will be wiser when the next tempting speculation presents itself.

"On their Shape."

In breeding for form it is a practice of chicken fanciers, who are probably the best breeders in the world, to put extremes together to produce a happy medium. For instance, to get a perfect length of back in the chicks it was necessary to couple a short-back cock with long, rangy hens. This rule could be followed with profit in breeding cattle, so far as outward form was concerned, but when we come to the milking quality, like the trotting quality in a horse, the question of form seems absolutely to have nothing to do with it. We say this advisedly too, notwithstanding the numerous prescriptions for a perfect cow's form that are going the round of the papers. This can be proved thus: Let one man select all the cows of moderate form in a dairy, and another pick out the same number from those left with a view solely to the amount of milk they give, and a thousand to one the last lot are the best cows. In selecting breeders for milk we cannot choose the two extremes, but are compelled to put pedigree with pedigree and hope for the best. This rule does not apply so well with thoroughbreds that have been bred for form for so many generations.—American Dairyman.

The Canadian Manufacturer says:—Every week we hear of fresh coal discoveries in the Northwest. Already the fuel problem for that country is solved, and it is as certain as any future contingency can be that over its vast extent settlers will have fuel cheap and in abundance. It cannot be brought to every man's door by railway, but the steady winter's sleighing insures that there will be the cheapest transportation, next to that by railway, to thousands of homes. The winter road over the snow costs nothing, and drawing coal even forty miles from a station would not very severely tax the settler. One week's teaming, or two at the outside, should supply him for the year. The difference which this unlimited coal supply is going to makein the Northwest is enormous, and it will tell greatly on set tlement ere another year be over.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, Nr Y.: Three months ago I was broken out with large ulcers and sores on my body, limbs and face. I procured your "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Purgative Pellets" and have taken six bottles, and to-day I am in good health, all those ugly ulcers having healed and left my skin in a natural, healthy, condition. HORSE MAXIMS.

Use the curry-comb lightly. When used roughly it is a source of great pain.

Let the horse have some exercise every day; otherwise he will be liable to fever or bad feet.

Let the heels be well brushed out every night. Dirt, if allowed to cake in, causes grease and sore heels.

Whenever a horse is washed, never leave him till he is rubbed quite dry. He will probably get a chill if neglected.

Change the litter partially in some parts and entirely in others every morning; brush out and clean the stall thoroughly.

Let the horse's litter be dry and clean underneath as well as on top. Standing on hot, fermented manure makes the hoofs soft and brings on lameness.

When a horse comes off a journey, the first thing is to walk him about till he is cool, if he is brought in hot. This prevents him from taking cold.

Never allow any one to tickle your horse in the stable. The animal only feels the torment and does not understand the joke. Vicious habits are thus easily brought on.

To procure a good coat on your horse, use plenty of rubbing and brushing. Plenty of "elbow grease" opens the pores, softens the skin and promotes the animal's general health.

Let his legs be well rubbed by the hand. Nothing so soon removes strain. It also detects thorns or splinters, soothes the animal and enables him to feel comfortable.

Let your horse stand loose, if possible, without being tied up to the manger. Pain and weariness from a continued position induce bad habits and cause swollen feet and other disorders.

Look ofteu at the animal's legs and feet. Disease or wounds in these parts, if at all neglected, soon become dangerous. — Farm, Field and Fireside.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

Child Desertion.

One day last week Mr. Benoni Briggs was unexpectedly made the guardian of a four year old child. A man named Chas. Haynes, who resided in Napanee some years ago but who has recently been living near Bath, called at Mr. Briggs' and told a pitiful tale of the death of his wife and child. He asked Mrs. Briggs to allow him to leave his six year old daughter there for half an hour while he went to see Chief Allen. He did not return as agreed, and after a few days Mr. Briggs set about trying to find somebody to adopt the little urchin, but no person would take her because of her ill-temper and bad training. The father returned on Wednesday and offered to pay Mrs. Briggs if she would take care of the child which she wouldn't assent to. The lady has not yet been relieved of the care of the youngster.

—The thermometer registered 35° below zero this morning.

—The Orange True Blues will hold their second annual ball in the Town Hall this evening.

—The Rathbun Company have already expended $175,000 on the N., T. & Q. Railway. A pretty good record for Deseronto.

—Mr. J. Clark of Trenton has contracted to string telegraph wires along the Central Ontario Railway from Picton to Wollaston.

—Mrs. Susan Otton, who some three years ago carried on business here as a member of the firm of Misses Hanly & Otton, died in Kingston a few days ago.

—The Street and Bridge Committee have examined the swing bridge and find a new structure a necessity. They have applied to the County Council for assistance and it is likely it will be given.

—The man who claims the authorship of the "Beautiful Snow" is not so numerous as in past years. After the experiences of this month the man's life would not be safe who would set up any such claim.

—The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Napanee Cemetery Company for the purpose of electing directors and the transaction of other business, will be held in the Council Chamber on Monday afternoon next at 2.30 p.m.

—The morning express train from the east on Tuesday was delayed seven hours by a freight train getting stuck in a snow drift near Lansdowne. The midday express train was four hours and the evening train three hours late, caused by the road being blocked with snow.

—Owing to the storm Messrs. Gibbard & Son's great cost sale of furniture has been extended till the 9th of February. Their stock is unusually fine and parties in want of furniture should avail themselves of this opportunity of purchasing cheaply.

—"Why go freezing around?" Yes, why, when as will be seen by an advertisement in another column that W. A. Rose & Co. are selling warm, stylish and durable overcoats at less then cost. Their stock is being cleared out at a great sacrifice.

—The People's Boot and Shoe store continues to gain favour with the public. The best goods, most complete assortment and living prices are the characteristics of this establishment. Just now bargains may be had in all kinds of winter goods. Give the "People's" a call. Campbell House block.

—Mayor Joy held his first court yesterday. The only prisoner was a "drunk and disorderly." The Mayor dismissed him with a warning. As the man prepared to leave he said to His Worship, "You'll not be as hard on us as the old Mayor." "Don't you trust me," was the reply, and His Worship said it as though he meant it.

—Rev. M. L. Pearson preached the funeral sermon of the late John W. Bristol in the C. M. Church last Sunday morning to a fair congregation. There would have been a larger attendance had it not been for the bad state of the roads and the inclemency of the weather. The funeral of the deceased, on Saturday, was largely attended, many of the leading men of county being in the procession.

—A new tea firm has been organized in town composed of Messrs. W. S. Detlor, E. M. Fralick and Alex. Henry, to be known as the Ontario Tea Company. Mr. T. McLroy, for many years with Messrs. H. & W. J. Crothers of Kingston, is the traveller of the Co. Mr. McLroy was, on the eve of his departure from Kingston, handsomely entertained by his former employees, who parted with him most regretfully.

Without the use of pills or blister,
I cured the same with Down's Elixir.

—The Firemen's oyster supper in the Town Hall Tuesday evening was very largely patronized and the spread was highly creditable to the Brigade. Upwards of four hundred persons sat down to the well laid tables. After supper Mayor Joy took the chair and made a suitable address, followed by Chief Constable Allen, who also was most happy in his remarks. A Black Chapter for this district, which extends from Napanee to Gananoque, was held in the Orange Hall, Napanee, on Monday evening last, when the following officers were elected:—County Grand Master, Lachlan McGoun; D.G.M., R. Montgomery; G. Chaplain, W. J. Arniel; G. Registrar, P. M. McCabe; G. Treasurer, W. Denison; G. Lecturers, J. Denison and Geo. Baker; 1st Standard Bearer, Jas. Blair; 2nd Standard Bearer, Jas. Riley, 2nd Committeeman; A Lanigan, 3rd Committeeman; J. Clancy, 4th Committeeman; R. Lewis, 5th Committeeman; Nesbitt Dean, 6th Committeeman; Samuel Kennedy, 7th Committeeman. After business was disposed of the members adjourned to Mr. W. Baker's restaurant, where he provided an excellent supper for them in fine style. The next county grand meeting will be held in Kingston, on the 2nd Friday in January, 1885.

Hymeneal.

Mr. T. E. Flaherty, of this town, was married on Tuesday last at Belleville to Miss Maggie Lynch, eldest daughter of Mr. Michael Lynch, who resides near that city. The ceremony was quietly performed by Rev. Father O'Donoghue at the R. C. Church. The groom was supported by Mr. Jos. Foltz, and the bride by her sister, Miss Mary Lynch. The bride was the recipient of many handsome presents, among which were the following :—

Silver cruit stand, Mr. Jas. Faltz; silver water pitcher, Mrs. W. Brady ; silver cake dish, Miss Nellie O'Hern; set China dishes, Miss Mary Lynch ; one dozen silver knives and forks, Miss Nellie Lynch ; silver tea pot, Miss Mary Foltz ; six silver napkin rings, Mrs. Davis ; glass set, Miss Flagher ; card receiver, Mr. W. Brady ; half dozen table spoons, Miss S. Lynch ; handsome lamp, Mr. Garthen ; handsome clock, Mr. ——.

"Ted" and his handsome young bride arrived in town Wednesday evening. Our young friend has our hearty congratulations along with those of a host of friends for happiness and prosperity.

Warden's Supper.

The oyster supper at Dickens' restaurant last night given by the Warden, Mr. B. C. Lloyd, to the members of the County Council and friends, was a very pleasant affair. Mr. Lloyd occupied the chair and Mr. John Herring the vice-chair. Forty-two sat down to the tables, and oysters of the best quality were served out "regardless of expense." After supper the following toasts were drunk : The chair proposed "The Queen," the company sang "God Save the Queen" ; "Governor-General," responded to by Capt. Polley ; "Dominion Parliament and Ontario Legislature," responded to by Messrs. Wm. Miller, Roe and Morden ; the vice-chair proposed "The Warden and County Council," responded to by the Warden, Mr. Johnston and members of the County Council ; "The Mayor and Town Council," responded to by the Mayor and Reeve ; "Our Educational Institutions," responded to by Messrs. Burrows, McGuin and Hall ; "The Learned Professions," responded to by Messrs. Morden and Williams; "The Press," responded to by Messrs. Lawless and Templeton ; "Ex-Warden," responded to by Messrs. Wood, Doller and Wm. Miller ; "Ex-Councillors," responded to by ex-Mayor James and Messrs. Herring and Parrott ; "The Ladies," responded to by Messrs. John Wilson, A. L. Morden and Chief Allen ; "Our Agricultural Interests," responded to by Chief Allen, President of the Agricultural Association. A very pleasant evening was spent and after many congratulations and prophecies for the future Warden and County Council the party sang "God Save the Queen" and dispersed about 12 o'clock.

Wednesday morning the cake was presented to Mr. Pruyn who donated it to the Captain, accompanied by a $5 bill for the Company.

The Value of a Christmas Present.

The jewellers are now being besieged by the Christmas present recipient fiend. One dropped in on a leading jeweller a few days ago. She was young and was accompanied by her mother. She produced a pair of "gold" bracelets and asked the gentlemanly attendant their value, remarking at the same time that they were a Christmas present.

"Four dollars and a half," was the reply.

"Is that all?" she asked, and turning to her mother she remarked, "I'll send them right back to him."

Young men should be careful what value they place on the presents they give their sweethearts. The girls have a way of finding out the true value.

Narrow Chance of Escape.

A person exposed to the sudden changes of our northern climate has little chance of escaping from colds, sore throat, rheumatism, frost bites, and other troubles incident to change of temperature, to say nothing of accidents and emergencies. The best external and internal ready-remedy is Hagyard's Yellow Oil.

ST. MARY MAGDALENE'S CHURCH.

Visit of Rev. J. J. Bogert, the Former Rector.

Large congregations assembled in St. Mary Magdalene's church, last Sunday, to welcome Rev. J. J. Bogert, Rector of St. Alban's, Ottawa, formerly rector of this parish. In the morning the reverend gentleman occupied the pulpit and preached an excellent sermon. In the evening the diocesian missionary meeting was held, Rev. Mr. Bogert being the delegate of the mission board. After the service, Venerable Archdeacon Jones pointed out the importance of the mission work in the diocese and how little attention had been given it by the Napanee congregation last year, the report showing larger subscriptions from Camden East, which was itself up to the present year a mission, and from Tyendinaga, than from Napanee. He hoped the report for this year would make a better showing. Rev. Mr. Bogert, before entering upon the subject of his visit, expressed the pleasure he experienced in meeting with his former parishoners whom he labored among for nearly twenty years. He congratulated them on the evidences of the church's progress, not only financially, but in the means adopted in making the worship of God more attractive, by bright music and tasteful decoration of the church. He never saw their beautiful church look brighter or prettier. In the decorations he saw the work of loving hands and he trusted all was done for the glory of God. After paying a tribute to the memory of the late Mrs. Chamberlain, and expressing the hope that on the occasion of his next visit he would find a window inserted in the church to her memory, he laid a statement of the mission board's finances before the congregation. He showed that the board was compelled, in order to lower its debt, to reduce the grants to missions where much larger grants than the original were necessary. He pointed out that in Ven. Archdeacon Jones' rural deanery many more missionaries were needed than the one asked for, but unless there was a large increase in the contributions of the people they could not be sent. In concluding he made a strong appeal for liberal contributions.

Saved Army Troubles.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR—In THE EXPRESS of a recent date I noticed an item referring to some troubles in the Saved Army, also expressing the hope that the Army would run along all right, as other officers had been elected. Now, the facts of the case are these: For some time past the work in some of the outposts has been badly managed, which was most discouraging to lovers of decency and order. It would seem that the object of some of the officers was to get all the money they could and leave the post as much in debt as possible, our noble General, himself, being a consenting party to such work. This was the cause of the troubles in Napanee. They could not get the money to pay for tramping and the like, at least for the past two months. This was the cause of the troubles in Napanee. They could not get the money to pay for tramping and the like, at least for the past two months. Napanee has not got any money for gospel tramps, and because some stood up for what was right, they got such epithets as the following hurled at them: "Get your own door yard clean," "You are like the harlot who wiped her mouth and said she was clean." The above, I understand, came from Major Moore to Mr. Chas. Stevens, our late treasurer. Under such circumstances is it any wonder that the Army has not got along well of late? I think it might do the parties I refer to, good, to read the 7th chapter of Joshua and govern themselves accordingly. One of the paid officers a few weeks ago, when in Napanee, sang, "I'm right down glad that I ever joined the army," and I believed him, for he had got a good supply of clothes by so doing, stripes, brass buttons, &c., and to quote his own words on leaving Picton last December: "I have more clothes than I know what to do with." This, perhaps, explains why the army accounts were torn out of the army books last October or November in Picton.

U. E. LOYALIST MEMORIAL CHURCH.

DEAR SIR.—As my letters upon the subject of a U. E. Loyalist Memorial Church seem to have occasioned some misconceptions upon the part of several of those who have done me the favor to read them, I will with your kind permission proceed to correct the principal of them.

The first misconception is that this memorial church project is a sharp scheme on my part to raise money from the public for a new place of worship in my parish by taking advantage of the feeling of the hour on U. E. Loyalist matters. This is no doubt a plausible coloring to put upon my motives, but not the right one. The truth is just the converse of this, viz: That I wish to take advantage of our need of a church in Adolphustown to erect an enduring monument to the brave pioneers of this part of Canada.

The second wrong impression is that I pro-

MR. EDITOR,—I suppose it takes the whole family of "Victoria Cabbage Leaves" to make one good head, for I noticed in your last issue a squib from one of the "leaves," and judging from the depth and quality of its epistle I should think that the whole family would scarcely form half a head, and if they did it would be of the species of cabbage called "Low Dutch." Mr. Editor, I suppose you know what the Low Dutch cabbage is like; but for fear you do not I will describe it. It grows low (not aspiring) is very leafy and makes quite an appearance; is quite a size in circumference, but if you take hold of it to see if it is solid, as good cabbage always is, you will be very much surprised as your finger will almost go through it. I know your correspondent belongs to that class. Low Dutch cabbage is never used for anything except to make saurkaraut and to feed to cows; and if you do make saurkaraut out of it it takes an enormous quantity to make a barrel. Mr. Editor, mayflowers and daisies are no specialty out here, as the place abounds in flowers of all kinds, but Victoria cabbage leaves are, for I only see "one" passing and repassing occasionally, and the farmers do not care to waste ground in trying to cultive such trash. I suppose when the favorite mool cow refused to be milked and gave her final kick, that the pail hit the head of the cabbage and knocked off this "leaf," and likely it has been blowing around through the snow drifts, mud and rain ever since, and finally thought it would light on the Pleasant Valley correspondents. As for that canine that hurt its foot I am glad to say that it is entirely better, which is a great deal more than I can say for V. C. leaf, for it was born with an empty head, and the doctors say that it will never fill up. The

U. E. LOYALIST MEMORIAL CHURCH.

DEAR SIR.—As my letters upon the subject of a U. E. Loyalist Memorial Church seem to have occasioned some misconceptions upon the part of several of those who have done me the favor to read them, I will with your kind permission proceed to correct the principal of them.

The first misconception is that this memorial church project is a sharp scheme on my part to raise money from the public for a new place of worship in my parish by taking advantage of the feeling of the hour on U. E. Loyalist matters. This is no doubt a plausible coloring to put upon my motives, but not the right one. The truth is just the converse of this, viz: That I wish to take advantage of our need of a church in Adolphustown to erect an enduring monument to the brave pioneers of this part of Canada.

The second wrong impression is that I propose this Church of England edifice as a substitute for some general or provincial monument, but this is far from my intention. I am quite aware that such a memorial can have no national character or significance. It is a partial scheme in the absence of a general one, not the best absolutely, but the best perhaps which one in my calling and circumstances could undertake, and I am happy to say that the proposition has met with much favor from gentlemen occupying some of the first positions in the country, as will appear when the prospectus is published.

In the last place, it has been imagined that I desire to monopolize the honor of erecting a memorial Loyalist church, so that it shall be the only one in the whole circuit of Quinte's Bay. But this is a mistake, and one which the concluding words of my letter should have prevented, in which I distinctly stated that I did not broach my project "as the only edifice of the kind which should be erected, nor as the only description of memorial appropriate to comemorate those worthy men, but as one whose character would meet the ideas and wishes of numbers of their descendants." My feeling is that it would greatly help to redeem the national neglect, and add much to the interests of the Bay, if it were dotted round with memorial churches to the U. E. Loyalists, erected by the various Christian bodies to which they belonged. I am, dear sir,

Very truly yours,

R. S. FORNERI, B. D.

Track Laying has Ceased.

The way that the "late fall chicken" got its feet frozen was, one day this winter it was feeling hungry and it happened to notice something green fluttering behind our barn, and thinking it was something good to eat it ran out after it and what do you suppose it was? Why it was V. C. leaf. "Cabbage Leaf" need not fear about his taking the correspondence away from "Mayflower," "Daisy" or myself, as he is not capable. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space, I remain as ever,

The subject of the discussion was whether the execution of Charles I. was justifiable or not. If Charles could have made his second appearance on earth and heard this debate he would have insisted on a second decapitation. Mr. Rufus Ovens acted as umpire and his decisions were Solomon-like in their nature.

paired to their future home, the Dominion Hotel. The following handsome presents were received by the bride:—Gold watch and chain from her husband; two silver butter coolers, one silver cruett stand, four silver napkin rings, one silver cake basket, one Oriental lamp, one set of majolica ware, two sets of vases, a dozen silver forks, a dozen silver spoons, silver butter knife, a set of English glassware and a magnificent easy chair, and others too numerous to mention. Charlie is one of the boys, and a right good fellow, while his wife possesses all the attributes which go to make a faithful and loving wife, and feeling certain of their future happiness we take genuine pleasure in extending our congratulations and best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Douglass.

WEDNESDAY.—Beaver Lake was the scene of a very spirited race to-day between two horses owned by Messrs. Mace and Knight. The ice was in excellent condition and both horses ran well. The race resulted in a victory for Mr. Knight's horse. Time, three-quarter-mile track, 2:50.....A party from Napanee, composed principally of members of the Napanee band, gave an excellent performance in the town hall this evening, in the form of a variety show. The programme opened with the old time circle, Mr. Vance acting as interlocutor and Messrs. Schryver and Osman as end men. After the olio a variety of songs and some excellent music were given, and the entertainment wound up with the mirth-provoking farce, "The Ghost in the Pawn Shop." The entertainment was first-class in every respect, and the company were greeted with their just dues—a large and appreciative audience. The boys deserve great credit for their undertaking and are altogether deserving of a good patronage at the entertainment they will give in Napanee on the 4th. Mr. C. Bruton acted as musical director.

THURSDAY.—An oyster supper under the auspices of the A. O. U. W. was given in the town hall this evening. It was well patronized and a good musical and literary programme was rendered, and as the oysters were of the very best quality and the audience in the best of spirits, no wonder it was a grand success.....It was rumored that there was to be telephone communication between the Dominion Hotel and the Wheeler House, but they have abandoned the idea, having made somewhat "different arrangements.

FRIDAY—SATURDAY.—The boys are to brace up for work after the past week of high carnival.

MONDAY.—On Monday evening last a happy wedding party arrived at Tamworth from Centreville to spend their honeymoon. The bride was accompanied by her sister, and the party put up at "Uncle Luke's." When the evening was far advanced (7 p. m.) the newly made man and wife were assigned to the bridal chamber in the north wing, while the sister-in-law occupied No. 2 off the parlor. Owing to the laughter and merriment of some railway officials in the parlor the young lady became frightened, and flew out of her bed-room, revolver in hand, and took refuge with her sister and brother-in-law, where she tarried the remainder of the night. The party returned to their homes in Centreville the following morning by stage. No cards.

TUESDAY.—The wedding on Tuesday evening of Mr. Charles Douglass, proprietor of the Dominion Hotel, and Miss Stella, youngest daughter of Mr. Luke Wheeler, of the Wheeler House, was a gala affair. A large crowd gathered in the English church at 8:30 p. m. to witness the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Mr. Serson. The audience was waiting, anxious and expectant, for the fatal (?) moment, when presently gay bells were heard from without and in a short time Mr. Chas. Knight, groomsman, led Miss Perry, bridesmaid, up the left-hand aisle, while up the right aisle came Mr. Chas. Douglass, husband-elect, and Miss Stella Wheeler, accompanied by her father, the Mendlessohn Wedding March ringing merrily from the organ. The bride was given away by her father, and after the ceremony had been performed was led triumphantly down the aisle by the happy husband. The friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Chas Douglass adjourned to the Wheeler House, where a sumptuous supper was partaken of. That evening the bridal party re-—A grand comic entertainment took place in the town hall on Friday evening last. The stage was beautifully arranged and the hall was crowded to the doors. The programme, which was a varied one, cosisting of dialogues, tableaux, vocal and instrumental music, was well carried out. The Blue Ribbon brass band of Sydenham enlivened the entertainment by rendering several choice selections. The chief feature of the entertainment was the dialogue entitled, "Strategy," in which Miss Minnie McLean took the leading part. As an amateur actress Miss McLean can scarcely be surpassed. Miss Annie Wagar, of Napanee, presided at the organ and played the accompaniments very nicely indeed. Too much praise cannot be given to the young people of Harrowsmith, who always take the lead in concerts. The proceeds, which netted the handsome sum of nearly $60, were devoted to charity. REEVESHIP.—Mr. Files having resigned the Reeveship the citizens have been for some time looking up their men and doing a little electioneering on the sly. At present two men are spoken of as candidates—Mr. D. B. Stickney, who will be the champion of the non-billiard party, and Dr. A. K. Aylsworth, representing the interests of the billiard party. Both are good men and will do well, but both cannot win, and as it is a question of morality we shall soon know the basis on which this little village stands. The billiard party argue that saloons and pool tables are of great benefit to the place, that they keep young men from the hotels, that they know men who have not been drunk since it was established and that the proprietor has taken in nearly eight hundred dollars, which would have gone into the coffers of the hotel-keepers, and that other places have billiard saloons. The anti-billiard party argue that it is the half-way house to the hotel, that young men who were never known to go to the hotel are seen going to the billiard rooms, that many men of whom it was said they had never been on a spree it can be said no longer, that they can play for drinks, that liquor may be taken into it, that fights take place in the back yard, that empty bottles are found there, and that the greater part of the earnings of young men who never drank go to pay for playing on the pool table. Next Friday will be nomination day and a week from that date polling day, when it will be decided.

THE U. E. LOYALISTS CENTENARY.

Speech of Rev. R. S. Forneri at Toronto.

At the U. E. Loyalist meeting in Toronto on Feb. 19th, Rev. R. S. Forneri, of Adolphustown, delivered the following able speech:—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

I feel rather awkward in rising to address this meeting, as I am not a descendant of a U. E. Loyalist, nor a commissioned delegate from the place in which I live, but have come here simply from personal regard for, and interest in, loyalist matters. However, from what I know of the feeling in Adolphustown, I may take upon myself to say that the people are favorable to the proposed celebration in Toronto. While they naturally desire to have a local celebration on the spot where their forefathers landed, they regard the capital of Ontario as the proper place for the provincial celebration. I must say I very much regret that there are no delegates present here to-night from Adolphustown, because it has been asserted that loyalism in that neighbourhood is "twice dead and plucked up by the roots." But loyalism is not dead in Adolphustown, though it may have been in a state of suspended animation. Loyalism was not dead there in 1866, the year of the Fenian raid, and why should it be so now? Upon a memorable Sunday in that year an officer rode into the village and announced that a company of men was wanted for service at the front immediately. It was 8 o'clock in the morning when the summons came and at 11 o'clock almost all the adult males in the township were ready to march. That same afternoon they filed into Kingston, a motley band to look at—some on small horses, some on large ones, some in uniform and some not, some with arms and some with none. It was a troop at which friends might smile but enemies tremble, for every man of them was ready to do and die for his country. The truth is that loyalism has been slumbering throughout the country as a sentiment, while as an operative principle it has ever made itself felt in every nerve and fibre of the land and in all national movements and developments; and it has been in abeyance as a sentiment simply because there has been nothing for years past to rouse it or to call it forth. ACCIDENT ON THE G. T. R.

A Train Falls Through Smith's Creek Bridge.

Monday morning about 7 o'clock a freight train drawn by engine No. 202, going east broke through the bridge over Smith's Creek in North Fredericksburgh, about three and a half miles from town. The accident was caused, it is said, by a broken wheel. The engine, tender and one car passed over safely but the adjoining fourteen cars loaded with lumber, corn, flour, farming implements, etc., were precipitated in the ditch. The last two cars, the van and a box car, remained on the track. The bridge was a complete wreck and the cars were smashed into kindling wood. Old railway men say it was the worst smash-up that they had seen for a long time. Four auxiliary trains were promptly despatched from Kingston and Belleville with a large gang of men and the whole day was occupied in clearing away the debris and constructing a new bridge. This was accomplished by 7 o'clock in the evening, when traffic was resumed. In the meantime all traffic was stopped. The two express trains from the west were detained here while other trains were standing at Kingston. It is very fortunate that the accident did not occur to a passenger train as the loss of life would have been terrible. At this point it is down grade and trains run very rapidly. The high rate of speed no doubt accounts for the complete demolition of the cars. The loss to the Railway Company will be very heavy.

The Excelsior Concert.

The concert given under the auspices of the C. M. The leading contributors were three members of the Toronto Philharmonic Society, Mrs. Bradley, soprano, late of St. Peter's choir; (Episcopal) Toronto; Miss Berryman, contralto, also connected with one of the English Church choirs of that city; Mr. Fred. Warrington, baritone, Toronto; Mr. Chas. Pearson, tenor, Toronto, and Miss Burton, of Kingston. The programme was opened with a quartette, "Song of the Triton," by Mrs. Bradley, Miss Berryman, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Warrington, which was a fitting introduction to a rich musical treat. It was a troop at which friends might smile but enemies tremble, for every man of them was ready to do and die for his country. The truth is that loyalism has been slumbering throughout the country as a sentiment, while as an operative principle it has ever made itself felt in every nerve and fibre of the land and in all national movements and developments; and it has been in abeyance as a sentiment simply because there has been nothing for years past to rouse it or to call it forth. When Jonathan Jones threw down his paper and rushed out of his house with his double-barrelled gun in his hand, his wife rushed after him and caught him by the coat-tails saying, "You old fool you, (this was her ordinary term of endearment) what are you going to do with that thing? Are you going to blow your head off?" J. Jones drew himself up to his full height and answered, "On yonder woodshed I am going to fire a national salute." The fact was that Jonathan had just read that Sebastapol was taken, the Russian war was over and that British arms were triumphant, and in an instant he was filled with patriotic ardor, which had to expend itself in firing a salute from the highest point of his woodshed. But who that had seen Jonathan that morning quietly sawing wood in his back yard and submitting to be called an "old fool" by his better half, would ever have thought that there was in him a spark of patriotic sentiment to kindle his bosom. And so, Mr. Chairman, the demonstrations of June next will rouse all the slumbering loyalism of the country and prove what vitality and power it has even as a sentiment.

I must before sitting down thank his worship the Mayor for referring so kindly in his letter to proposed local celebrations at a distance. I do not think they need clash in the least with the provincial celebration to which I wish the most complete success. In conclusion I may venture to do one thing in the name of Adolphustown, though not a delegate, and that is to invite all here present and the citizens of Toronto generally to attend our June celebration. I am sure if you do you will receive a hearty welcome, and although I cannot promise you as imposing a demonstration as, no doubt, Toronto will have, you will find there what you will value far above all glitter and show—an honest and hearty attachment to the principles for which the old Loyalists fought and suffered the loss of all things, and devotion to the great Empire to which we belong. (Applause.)

Death of Dr. C. H. Lavell.

Dr. C. H. Lavell, of Kingston, well known in this county, died on Monday last. The deceased was one of Kingston's most gifted young men, and in his profession would have taken very high rank. As it was he was without a rival in the treatment of the eye and ear, and he had a practice which was not confined to the city of Kingston. His fatal ailment was inflammation of the bowels, from which he suffered greatly.

The concert given under the anspices of the C. M. The leading contributors were three members of the Toronto Philharmonic Society, Mrs. Bradley, soprano, late of St. Peter's choir; (Episcopal) Toronto; Miss Berryman, contralto, also connected with one of the English Church choirs of that city; Mr. Fred. The programme was opened with a quartette, "Song of the Triton," by Mrs. Bradley, Miss Berryman, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Warrington, which was a fitting introduction to a rich musical treat. Misses Aylsworth and Helen Daly followed with a well executed instrumental, "Midsummer Night's Dream." Mr. Pearson sang "Bright Star of Love" very acceptably. He has a pleasant, well trained voice, though not of great compass. A charming duet, "Master and Scholar" was exquisitely sung by Mrs. Bradley and Mr. Warrington, who captivated the audience, and an encore was demanded, which was responded to. Miss Berryman sang "Good-Bye" in sweetest strains and the succeeding number was taken by Mr. Warrington, who sang "Sailing" in capital style. By this time Mr. Warrington had won the good opinion of the audience and was vociferously encored. He responded with a comic song which he rendered in inimitable style, showing that he has in addition to a finely trained voice a keen sense of the ridiculous in human nature. So mirth provoking was this effort that he was a second time recalled. Mrs. Bradley succeeded him and gave her first solo. It was the scena and aria "Softly Sighs" from the opera of "Der Freischutz", a difficult composition but which, nevertheless, was well executed. She was encored and gracefully responded. Mrs. Bradley not only possesses a fine voice, but an attractive presence and throws into her selections proper expression. The first part was concluded by Miss Berryman and Mr Pearson in a duett, "Only Thee." The opening number of the second part was taken by Mr. Warrington "Alone in the Desert," his best contribution, again winning the plaudits of the audience. Miss Williams and Miss Blanche Williams executed an instrumental duett most charmingly. Mrs. Bradley sang the ever popular Scotch ballad, "Within a Mile of Edinboro' Toon" in her best voice and scored another success. As an encore she gave "Home, Sweet Home". This good old melody of which the people will never grow tired was never better sung here. The audience were made to see, in its sweet strains, new beauties, and as a result she was loudly applauded. Mr. Pearson sang "If" and gave place to Miss Burton, who was most enthusiastically received. Her contributions were warmly applauded, which went to show that her great popularity with Napanee audiences is growing, rather than diminishing. Miss Berryman sang "Farwell," and Mrs. Bradley, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Warrington rendered the 'Laughing Trio" most acceptably. A quartette, "Good Night," from the opera of Martha, and the National Anthem brought a most enjoyable evening's entertainment to a close. The accompanyists were Misses Sills and Willi-

PECK'S BAD BOY AND HIS PA.

The Old Man Buys a New Suit.

"Did you see pa's new suit of clothes?" asked the bad boy as he came into the store and held a biscuit under the molasses tap. "Yes," said the groceryman, as he charged the boy's father with a quart of molasses; "your folks are getting mighty tony. Your pa looks like a churchwarden at a vestry meeting. Where did he get them clothes? Has there been a fire?" "No, there wasn't any fire, nuther. Pa don't have to burn down folks' stores to get a new suit; betcher life he don't. He got 'em at McAlister's, and it don't cost a fortin' to get a suit there, nuther. My ma gave him $10, and sent him down to McAlister's, and just look at the consequences. He's too respectable for anything. Oh! he's a regular dude, pa is. When ma saw him come in she felt as if there was company in the house an' she made me go an' wash my nek, an' it's bin scar ever sense. When bedtime come you'd a dide to see ma leading him to the spare bedroom an' hopin' he'd sleep well an' not blow out the gas. Pa sed he was afeared he was puttin' her to too much trouble, but ma sed she was only too glad to have a gentleman in the house, an' when I snikered ma slapped me an' sed, 'Be a good by, an' mabbe I will buy you a new suit when I get to be financial minister of the sewin' society.' This is about the biggest indoocement I've had to be good, an' I guess I'll try; betcher life I will." And the bad boy went out and hung up a sign which read: "Folks Wearin' McAllister's Close Can Git There Groceries Fur Nothin'."

Awfully Sudden End.

Belleville, Feb. 25.—Yesterday afternoon Rev. Sheldon Young, one of the oldest superannuated ministers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, dropped dead. He drove to the city to consult a physician concerning his ill health, and when crossing the railroad bridge a neighbor observed him loose the reins and drop his head. Help arrived to find life extinct and to keep the corpse from falling out of the cutter. Mr. Young was troubled with dropsy for a number of years, and his friends suppose that it reached his heart.

Farmers of Lennox & Addington.

The Directors of the Co-operative Warehousing Co. of Napanee,

Having chosen me as their Manager, I would say to all whom it may concern, that the storage of grain can be obtained on as favorable terms as heretofore, or there will be a purchaser of grain, Mr. A. N. Diamond, who has formerly proved himself one of the most liberal and satisfactory buyers that we have ever had dealings with (or other buyers if they wish to avail themselves of the opportunity.) Having obtained the services of Mr. Diamond as an experienced salesman at a moderate commission, farmers can have their grain shipped and sold to the Company, any Bank or other responsible person whom they may choose whereby they can obtain the advantage of the prices of the best markets with the least possible cost of charges, and there will be no more moving of stored grain into neighboring storehouses, contrary to your expectations and wishes and contrary to any understanding ever made with the Company or the late Manager that I ever heard of. Of his determined motives and objects I leave yon to form your own opinion.

WOMAN'S GOSSIP.

A New Field for Women.

More and more do the women of the present day incline to the avocations and amusements of what used to be called the sterner sex. Latterly, says the St. James' Gazette, it would seem that they have taken to the pursuit of burglary. Miss Rosette Lovell and Miss Ada Lawrence have been brought up at the Southwark police court charged with being concerned, with certain male persons, in various felonious entries into dwelling-houses, and from the evidence it would seem that the ladies took a no less active part than the gentleman. Disguising their charms under billy-cock hats and black beards, and doubtless accommodated with the friend and companion of the modern burglar, a well-made revolver, these fair ones asserted the rights of woman by cracking cribs with neatness, courage, and dexterity. However, it may be hoped that no chrivalous feelings toward their sex and youth (Rosette is of the romantic age of 20, though, perhaps, she could scarcely be described as "sweet") will save them from the rigors of the law if they are convicted. Ladies who break into houses belonging to other people must be treated even more severely than those, who, like a young person who also figured lately at the metropolitan police-court, drown the remembrance of slighted love by firing pistols from railway-carriage windows on the public at large.

Women More Daring than Men.

But women are always more daring than men, exclaims the San Francisco Chronicle. When they want to do anything they will endure as no man will to accomplish their ends. A woman has a very clear idea of what she is entitled to and what she may with safety claim. She can not go to a dog-fight, or a wrestling-match, or a slugging encounter, although she would like to. But she can bully a man if he does not do what she is entitled to. She can make a car-conductor's hair turn gray in the distance of a block. She can, and enjoys doing it, drive the most patient store-keeper to the verge of insanity. She is capable of going down town sixteen times to change a paper of pins. Those things everybody knows. But if one wants to see the woman in her highest state of independence and aggression against man, let him go and quietly look on at a matinee at the theatre. When a woman takes her seat there is no power on earth that will induce her to budge. If one comes late and has to pass a dozen others to get to her seat she knows what she has to expect. She does not attempt to apologize quite as hungry after marriage as before. Cupid is a young gentleman that must be well fed. "Love in a cottage" seems all sunshine and honeysuckles, but rent and taxes and soap, soda and sandpaper, however vulgar and sublunary, must all be duly provided for. So when you come to a settlement it often proves a settler indeed. Instead of money the gentleman has expectations, and is "looking out for something to do;" he has "a rich uncle who may die," or a bronchitic aunt not expected to wheeze and cough through another winter. You may have offers enough of this sort, just as the servant-maid has when she comes into her quarter's wages. Pray, madam, beware of all such; have no younger sons or younger brothers about your premises. Curates are very dangerous—no good themselves, they keep others off. As to dashing young officers, few can say, in the words of 'poor Miss Bailey,' 'I've got a £1 note in my regimental small clothes.' So be guarded and distant; let us recommend a cast of countenance like a builder's notice board—'No admittance except on business.' But do not aim too high. The higher you aspire the less your chance, till at last it ends at a vanishing point. Just take a pencil and draw a pyramid, a cone, or a tall triangle. Take a slice of the base, and it is a very wide slice; this represents the comparative number of the striving men of business, and among them most ladies proper will succeed. But this might be a little 'come down,' while every slice above represents a class smaller and smaller, literally fine by degrees and elegantly less. But beware of one danger. The higher you aspire the lower you may sink, with a great blot on your family escutcheon. Lord Burleigh truly said, 'Marry your daughters early or they will marry themselves,' and choose, in their despair, a partner for life even lower than the lowest you could have proposed to them."

Four of a Kind.

A rustic looking man sat in the smoking car of an Omaha train last Tuesday night, when another rural-looking person came in.

"Is this seat taken?" asked the newcomer.

"No, sir, sit down; sit right down," said the other, making room next him.

Soon the two old farmers were in conversation.

"Where are you from?"

"I live near Buda. Where do you hail from?"

"I'm a pretty near neighbor of yours I live near Kewanee."

"Farming?"

"Yes. Are you?"

"Yes; farming and stock?"

"Been to town with stock?"

Canadian aad American Beauty.

A good deal is being said at present about the comparative beauty of English and American women. Lord Coleridge, it seems, gives the palm for both beauty and intellect to the Americans. Sir Lepel Griffin, on the other hand, is strongly in favor of the English and Canadians, and in this connection mentions Toronto ladies as very generally noticeable for good looks and fresh, healthy complexions. Sir Lepel is inclined to attribute a great deal of this superiority which he assigns to the English and Canadian sisterhood partly to climatic influences, and still more to the habits of every-day life generally prevalent. He says that both English and Canadian ladies take far more out-door exercise in a great variety of specified ways, do a great deal more walking, and busy themselves more in the activities of benevolent and religious exercises.

There is a great deal of truth in all this. Persons shut up for the most part of a long, cold winter in hot and comparatively ill-ventilated houses, with scarcely anything but what, as if in mockery, is called, "carriage exercise," must soon have a bleached and delicate appearance, which passes speedily from the attractiveness of

Soon the two old farmers were in conversation.

"I'm a pretty near neighbor of yours I live near Kewance."

"Farming?"

"Yes. Are you?"

"Yes; farming and stock?"

"Been to town with stock?"

"Yes: brought up a hundred head of steers."

"I brought hogs."

And so the conversation ran on until just before the train reached Mendota, and the two old farmers were right well acquainted. Presently another man who looked like a merchant came in, and was surprised to see one of the old farmers.

"Well, well, well," said the new man, "I'm glad to see you; maybe you can help me out of a little embarrassing trouble. I want to pay a man a little on train before I get off at Mendota and I haven't money enough. If you will let me have $100 on my check I'll be very much obliged."

"Certainly, I'm glad to do it," and out came the farmer's pocketbook. But, alas! he had only $40 in small bills and a beautiful, crisp $500 bill."

"You're perfectly welcome to the $40 if that'll help you out, or to the $500 if you can get it broke."

"Perhaps your friend can help us out; the $40 will hardly answer," said the merchant, and then he apologised for making so much trouble.

"Well," softly said the other farmer who until now had been silently looking on, "I can't change a $500 bill, but I can give you another one for it, and I think it came out of the same batch and was print-on the same press.

And turning to the other old farmer he added: "If your partner hadn't come just as he did mine would have been here in a minute. I've been getting ready to work on that same game ever since we left Chicago."

At Mendota four very much disgusted confidence men stepped off the train and stood around in the cold waiting for the next train returning to Chicago.

He says that both English and Canadian ladies take far more out-door exercise in a great variety of specified ways, do a great deal more walking, and busy themselves more in the activities of benevolent and religious exercises.

There is a great deal of truth in all this. Persons shut up for the most part of a long, cold winter in hot and comparatively ill-ventilated houses, with scarcely anything but what, as if in mockery, is called, "carriage exercise," must soon have a bleached and delicate appearance, which passes speedily from the attractiveness of youth to something anything but attractive. In trying to help others, many ladies, in short, are themselves helped to better health, better spirits, and better looks.

The Ladies of Berlin.

The ladies of Berlin are painted in most unflattering colors by M. Vasili in his paper on Berlin society in the present number of the Nouvelle Revue. As a general rule, he says, the Berlin woman of the upper classes neither reads nor works nor occupies herself in any useful way. She passes her existence in gossip and in the frivolities of the toilet. She has not two serious ideas in her head, nor two elevated feelings in her mind. Her preferences are vulgar, her influence insignificant. She lacks grace, education, and tact. She tries to ape Frenchwomen as well as she can, but she only succeeds in reproducing their defects. It is impossible to make her converse, so little does she know of what is going on in the world, so completely is she absorded in admiring herself and critising her rivals. The morality of the married ladies is, according to M. Vasili, no higher than the standard presented by the average French novel. In short, Berlin society has, if we are to accept this account for it, all the vices of the French society of the last century without the redeeming wit and grace.

Some Advice to Mothers.

An experienced old lady used to say: "Don't tell me about engagements, love, and attachments, and all that, till you can report that they have been in and out of the lawyer's office." People can't live upon air, observes London Society, and to see some of them, even at a wedding breakfast, you will find that they are

"You're perfectly welcome to the $40 if that'll help you out, or to the $500 if you can get it broke."

"Perhaps your friend can help us out; the $40 will hardly answer," said the merchant, and then he apologised for making so much trouble.

"Well," softly said the other farmer who until now had been silently looking on, "I can't change a $500 bill, but I can give you another one for it, and I think it came out of the same batch and was printon the same press.

And turning to the other old farmer he added: "If your partner hadn't come just as he did mine would have been here in a minute. I've been getting ready to work on that same game ever since we left Chicago."

At Mendota four very much disgusted confidence men stepped off the train and stood around in the cold waiting for the next train returning to Chicago.

A party of Baptist clergymen were bluefishing off Martha's Vineyard the other day. A question arose as to whether a certain specimen was really a bluefish. "We call 'em Baptists," said a native fisherman. The Baptist clergyman rather eagerly asked why. "Case they spile so soon arter they're taken out 'o the water."

It was a Boston clergyman who recently impressively remarked that, "men thought all others mortal but themselves," and he added with considerable solemnity that "they frequently looked in the newspaper for the record of the deaths of friends and acquaintances, but never once thought of looking in the papers for the announcement of their own decease."

Important to Ruptured Persons.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. Ask your druggist for a free book on rupture, or send 6 cents for one to the Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. The cruise of the Duke of Edinburgh in the Mediterranean separates him from his family for six months.

An 11-year-old-boy in Corydon, Ind., committed suicide because his parents refused to let him eat at first table.

If you have a fondness for telling bad things, begin with yourself; if for repeating good deeds, begin with your neighbor.

"My dear," said a dying husband to his wife, "when I am dead will you see that my grave is kept green?" "Yes," sobbed the heart-broken woman, "I will for a little while."

Our bookkeeper, who has taken a lively interest in this Egyptian business, says that the accounts are balanced thus: England—All loss and no profit. Mehdi—All prophet and no loss.

Lemuel Whisten, near Enterprise, tied a halter around his neck and hitched himself to his waggon. He then scared the horses and made them run. Whisten's young wife had died but a few weeks before.

A lady, a regular shopper, who had made an unfortunate clerk tumble over all the stockings in the store, objected that none were long enough. "I want," she said, "the longest hose that are made." "Then, madam," was the reply, "you had better apply at the next engine-house."

An effort is being made in New York to have the church bells silenced. A man who attends a dog-fight or a slugging-match on Saturday night, and doesn't get into bed till 2 o'clock Sunday morning, naturally dislikes to have his slumbers disturbed by the clanging of a church bell a few hours later.

Robert P. Pullman, of Carnesville, Ga., publishes this card in the local paper: "I hereby give notice to all dram sellers and dram drinkers that I have left the old way with the old year, and have turned into the new way with the new year, and I want all of them to give me the go by. I intend to redeem my name and character, and shall look upon the man that offers me liquor as my deadly enemy.

"What do circus people do in the winter?" asks a contemporary. The clown devotes the season to gleaming a fresh crop of jokes from the almanacs printed prior to the American revolution, and occasionally writes for the London comiweeklies; and the "strong man," who splinters rocks with his fist, secures employment in a cheap boarding house at hammering tough beef. No doubt the others find employment adapted to their respective talents.

Capt. Webb's widow is now compelled to maintain herself and her family by cultivation and to good transportation facilities, and the farmers in England will find times worse for them than ever before. With unprofitable wheat growing, and cattle raising threatened with serious foot-and-mouth diseases, many of the more enterprising of the English tenant farmers will, no doubt, transfer their homes to Canada. The sooner they do so the better for themselves. English landlords cannot again command such high rents and exacting lease terms as they have heretofore enjoyed.

Now that attention is being drawn towards the preservation of our forests, every suggestion of value ought to receive its full share of attention. The Week, our new literary contemporary, well says:—

"Apropos of the important question of the preservation of our forests, Canadians and Americans might profit by the experience of continental forestry schools and from the experiments carried out on the tree farms of Central Italy. Whole districts which had been stripped of timber on the Alps have been reforested, and in the Ardennes woods are systems of forest-farming which not only preserve the trees but make an excellent investment on the operation. A Belgian writer residing near Ardennes says the proprietors found that the land cultivated in trees and cut once in a hundred years—i. e., the trees being selected according to their condition, and cut at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum—paid just as well as raising wheat on the same extent of land. What is wanted, then, in our forest management is the application of a vigorous system of intelligent official superintendence to the cutting of the trees, none but those marked for cutting to be allowed to be cut. This would pay even now as management, and in the course of the not long time which will see all our unregulated forests exhausted, the forests so controlled and policed would furnish an excellent investment for the capital employed in keeping them from present destruction. The lumberers now cut all the desirable trees as they go, littering the ground with an enormous mass of small branches and dead wood, which becomes as inflammable as powder. These never burn, but only scorch and kill the standing trees, and subsist and spread by this litter of the lumbermen, who are utterly indifferent to what happens to the country when they have got their logs out."

Somebody has been taking observations about the men of weak knees against whom so many hard things are usually said. One of the results of his observations is the discovery that some of the men who have a good deal to say about firmness are foremost among the weak-kneed class. Ministers are put down as men of that stamp, generally, and editors might be usually put in the same category. Ministers have certainly very outspoken ways in regard to "sin," and the devil, and a good many other well known individuals whose reputations for wrong doing are well established, but there is often quite another spirit manifest when the corns of some friend of the church or the congregation happen to be in the way. No doubt the others find employment adapted to their respective talents.

Capt. Webb's widow is now compelled to maintain herself and her family by doing service as a book-keeper in a Boston book store. There is nothing discreditable to her in thus earning an honest living by honest industry; it is certainly much more creditable than passing round the hat among her husband's old friends and admirers, but it certainly is not very creditable to the man himself that he should so recklessly jeopardize his own life when he knew the position his wife and family would be placed in should his venture fail, as it did. Men who have given hostages to fortune are certainly not warranted in being reckless about health or personal safety. The unfortunate Captain was no doubt a very plucky man, and many admired him because of his pluck, but now that his wife is a widow the admiration of the world is of but precious little value.

Now that the question of how most effectually to prevent the possibility of railway accidents is receiving so much consideration, suggestions from all quarters are in order. A good deal of stress has been laid on the suggestion that telegraph operators ought to be constantly at their posts at every station, great and small. Of course the objection is that the expense of an efficient telegraph operator at all times at every small stopping place, would be very large and probably out of proportion to the actual importance of the work required. We would like to know if the telephone could not be conveniently supplied for many by-stations? The telephone does not require a skilled operator, and in the case of small crossings, the conductors and engine drivers could themselves make all necessary enquiries of those from whom information is needed. The telephone ought to be of great practical value in connection with small railway stations.

Editors are worse yet. How valiant is the average party editor in denouncing the crookedness and the inconsistency of the members of the other party, but how few editors have the moral courage to breathe the first word of disapproval in regard to the meanest act a member of his own party may be guilty of? "Backbone" is an admirable thing to talk about but so far as we have ever observed, the real inflexible article is rarely to be be found among men of any class. The man who often has most to say about it generally has the least of it in his possession.

New York Drinking Places.

The bar-tenders of these places about which I am writing are spruce young men who are not infrequently experts at mixing drinks. They are paid very comfortable salaries, and are neat and dexterous. They wear white linen coats and aprons, and are always scrupulously barbered. The utmost cleanliness is observable on all sides, and they are careful enough in mixing drinks to satisfy the most fastidious tastes. The slovenly, greasy and oily bar-tender who waxes his mustache and wears a diamond shirt stud is no longer found in New York. The proprietors of these avenue saloons seldom go behind the bar. They sit and talk with their friends. They too drift into politics early, and are the most influential men in their wards.

The proprietors of the Broadway shops are shrewd and quiet men of business. They don't dabble in politics at all, but content themselves with salting away fortunes every year. Such men as Dowd, Black, Stewart, Wildey, Morton, and Houghton clear all the way from $15,000 to $25,000 a year by their Broadway places. I was in one of these places one afternoon recently talking with the owner quietly, when he stopped and pointed to a man behind the bar. He was one of eight or ten bright-looking young bar-tenders. "Is your hat here?" asked the proprietor, looking him straight in the eye.

"Yes, sir," said the bar-tender somewhat apprehensively.

The proprietor took a card out of his pocket and wrote a few words on it.

Now that the question of how most effectually to prevent the possibility of railway accidents is receiving so much consideration, suggestions from all quarters are in order. A good deal of stress has been laid on the suggestion that telegraph operators ought to be constantly at their posts at every station, great and small. Of course the objection is that the expense of an efficient telegraph operator at all times at every small stopping place, would be very large and probably out of proportion to the actual importance of the work required. We would like to know if the telephone could not be conveniently supplied for many by-stations? The telephone does not require a skilled operator, and in the case of small crossings, the conductors and engine drivers could themselves make all necessary enquiries of those from whom information is needed. The telephone ought to be of great practical value in connection with small railway stations.

The gallows has not been used in Erie County, Pa., for fifty years, public opinion having forbidden it since the hanging of Henry Francisco, then termed judicial murder. The Philadelphia Times tells the story as follows:—"On the 31st of March, 1832, Henry Francisco and his child-wife, Maud, only 16 years old, and only three weeks a wife, were found insensible in bed, with a bottle of poison by their side. Two letters, one in the hand of each, informed the friends that although united in marrisge but three weeks they desired to enter eternity hand in hand. Medical assistance was promptly sought, but in less than an hour after discovery the beautiful girl breathed her last, and the efforts of the physicians were concentrated upon the purpose of saving the man's life. For hours his life hung in the balance, but finally their exertions were rewarded with success, and the life of Francisco was saved—saved that it might a few months later be taken on the gallows-tree amid the tears and groans of a sympathetic people and the prayers of two sobbing ministers of the Gospel."

The agricultural prospects in England are not, by any means, encouraging in their outlook. Wheat growing is carried on on a much smaller scale than it was years ago. It is said that there are now nearly 400,000 acres less of land under wheat than in previous years, and the prospects are for a further decline. Since wheat growing has commenced on so large a scale in the Western States and transportation has become so cheap, it is not possible for the English farmer, contending against a bad climate, wet harvest seasons, high rent and high taxes, to profitably compete in an open market. Soon the vast wheat fields of the great Northwest of Canada will be opened up to good most fastidious tastes. The slovenly, greasy and oily bar-tender who waxes his mustache and wears a diamond shirt stud is no longer found in New York. The proprietors of these avenue saloons seldom go behind the bar. They sit and talk with their friends. They too drift into politics early, and are the most influential men in their wards.

The proprietors of the Broadway shops are shrewd and quiet men of business. They don't dabble in politics at all, but content themselves with salting away fortunes every year. Such men as Dowd, Black, Stewart, Wildey, Morton, and Houghton clear all the way from $15,000 to $25,000 a year by their Broadway places. I was in one of these places one afternoon recently talking with the owner quietly, when he stopped and pointed to a man behind the bar. He was one of eight or ten bright-looking young bar-tenders. "Is your hat here?" asked the proprietor, looking him straight in the eye.

"Yes, sir," said the bar-tender somewhat apprehensively.

The proprietor took a card out of his pocket and wrote a few words on it.

"Take that to the cashier," he said; "get a week's pay in advance and leave at once. You can't stop in this place any longer."

"Why, what have I done?" asked the man defiantly.

"You rub your infernal mustache too much," said the proprietor. "I have watched you for the last half hour. You know it is the rule in this place that no man can touch his face with his hands. Customers don't want bar-tenders who are continually pulling their mustaches to mix drinks for them. That may strike you as being rather silly," said the proprietor to me, as the man went away, "but it isn't. It is by attending to the smallest details of this business that I have got it on a thoroughly successful basis. I have to watch the men like a bull dog, and it is wearing on my nerves."

After the Broadway places comes the Hoffman House, which is unquestionably the most magnificent bar-room in the world; Delmonico's, which is the best; the Fifth Avenue hotel which is the worst, and the Windsor and Brunswick, both of which are admirable. These places have a regular run of customers every night, and make a good deal of money. They are frequented by the best class of men in town, and comparatively little drinking is done over the bars.

There are no oaths in the Chinese language. When a Chinaman has his legs knocked from under him by a boy on a clipper, he probably hurries home and slams the door with thundering emphasis. There must be some way to give vent to his feelings.

THE AUSTRIAN THUGS.

The Bloody Deeds of the Vienna Monsters Recapitulated—Operations of the Firm of Schenk Brothers—Wholesale Assassins—A Terrible Story.

It is a lamentable fact that there are human beings so diabolically and desperately wicked as almost to justify the theory of metempsychosis, and make it seem probable that ravenous wild beasts—bloody, cruel, merciless—may be found temporarily inhabiting the forms of men. That idea, however, is contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and must be discarded as unorthodox, if not altogether pagan. Otherwise it would account reasonably for the existence of such a monster of iniquity as Hugo Schenk—head of a recently discovered confederacy of Austrian murderers. Approached from almost any other point of view, this man's moral degradation seems inexplicable, except, indeed, on the assumption that—independently of the transubstantiation of souls—an instinct more ferocious than that of the fiercest tiger and infinitely more subtle than that of the serpent may lurk in the breast of a handsome, fascinating gentleman. This same Hugo Schenk, his brother, and an accomplice named Schlossarek, are now in prison at Vienna, waiting their trial; but, inasmuch as they have already confessed to many homicides, their case is not likely to be prejudiced by comment. They and their assistants pursued the calling of murder as a regular trade, and for the past three years have lived luxuriously on the profits of blood. The Schenks, Silesians by birth, are the sons of a judge, who caused them to be well educated. They have the manners and bearing of men of rank; and Hugo, the arch-villain, is described as tall, handsome, gracious and accomplished—as calculated by nature to please a young girl's fancy and win her love. At home, in Silesia, they behaved themselves so vilely, acquired such drunken and dissolute habits, that their father turned them out of doors—a hopeless disgrace to their family. How these two riotous young spendthrifts first took to the occupation of murder is not known; but the authorities have discovered that they associated themselves with Schlossarek, a confirmed criminal, and with several other bad characters. It is not uncommon in Vienna for female domestic servants who have saved money to advertise for husbands in the local papers; and Hugo Schenk—a married man living apart from his wife—used to answer such advertisements, sometimes under pretense of being an engineer in receipt of a good salary, and occasionally as a wealthy aristocrat with a contempt for class prejudices. He would meet the girls by appointment, and after paying court to them for a few days or weeks induce the silly, trusting creatures to draw rests, however, the Pesth authorities are anxious to have likenesses of the accused, as of late years several young women of that city have mysteriously disappeared, and in a manner which would suggest dealings with the Schenk establishment. Yet though, for the reasons named, the brothers found it more convenient and safer to limit their operations with a certain rank of life, Hugo did not disdain to fly at higher game. There was a certain Rose Ferenczy, a woman of 30—imaginative, romantic—the illegitimate daughter of a Hungarian nobleman, and possessed of some means of her own. The villain laid regular siege to the poor lady's heart, persuaded her to become his mistress, and occasionally visited her in the remote suburb where she lodged. Though Rosa Ferenczy was frightened of her lover, and during his frequent absences suspected him of being a scoundrel, yet he had only to show himself, when all her fears and suspicions vanished. About Christmas time he took her to the opera and to the theatres, and must have promised marriage, for she said to her landlady, on going on a journey with him, as she supposed, to visit his sister, "You will see me happy and married or never again." Schlossarek was with them when they set off, and within twenty-four hours Mlle. Ferenczy's corpse was picked up in the Danube, near Presbourg. By that transaction the firm netted 1,800 florins. The other partners, however, always complained that Hugo was a mean man, and did not make a fair distribution of the profits of the concern.

Had these Austrian thugs—incomparably more base than the worshippers of Rhowani—continued to conduct their frightful and abominable trade with ordinary prudence they might be still at large, but one of them, having killed a servant-girl, had the adaucity to take her bank-book to the post-office with the object of drawing the deposit to her credit. The woman had been missed. Suspicion was naturally aroused at the post-office, and the three principal members of the firm were consequently arrested. Of those who were at that time among the first on the Schenks' list, one is the daughter of respectable parents and Secure her property, conceal her body and return quietly to town, as if nothing had happened, to plan fresh murders and to carry on their regular business of killing.

The gang laid their schemes in the most methodical manner, and sometimes had several projected homicides in hand at once. Hugo has confessed to having planned five murders for last week alone, which he reckoned would have yielded a profit of 30,000 florins. It seems, moreover, that he intended giving up business in his native country and cross to America with his mistress, a girl named Emily Hoechsmann. This girl did not know how he got his money until the day of the arrest, when she offered herself as a witness for the prosecution. It appears that Emily Hoechsman herself had in the first place been marked for slaughter; but Hugo, finding her very poor as well as very pretty, spared her, and persuaded her to live with him as his wife. One day last autumn he left home for a few hours, arranging to meet her at a coffee garden the same evening, and on that occasion was the life and soul of the company — a merry fellow, brimming over with jest and anecdote. Such cold-blooded malignity is simply appaling, and to compare these devilish monsters with the sect which formerly practised thuggee would be manifestly unfair to the dark-skinned assassins for conscience sake. Indeed, we doubt whether the history of crime records any villainies more horrible than theirs. Individual murders as bad as any of those done by the Austrian gang have certainly been committed, and hideous masacres of whole families, as in the case of Troppmann, but the Schenks and their accomplices killed again and again, in cold blood, for the sake of plunder. Sooner or later they must have come to the scaffold. One or more of the band would have been sure to betray the others. Homicide has, unfortunately, been rife in England of late, and many mysterious murders remain unaccounted for. Nevertheless, such a long series of crimes of a particular kind as are charged against the accused in this case could not possibly take place here without leading to searching inquiries and consequent discovery. The firm of Schenk Brothers, wholesale assassins, could not, indeed, have traded anywhere, subject to the publicity of an active newspaper press. Hugo, the decoy, must constantly have been seen in company with his victims; and it seems very strange that the Austrian police were not able long ago to trace him and his accomplices to their place of business. That they will be executed is a matter of course. Yet an instant, sudden death seems too light a punishment for such detestable villains.—London Telegraph.

The Sergeant's Vow.

It was evening, after one of the greatest battles of the Rebellion. The surviving soldiers of the battle were fatigued, and glad to drop down almost anywhere to rest. Those who had been on the reserve were caring for the dead and wounded, and in the hospital tent those who wore the blue, and those who wore the gray, were groaning with the wounds received in battle and were being treated by the Union physicians.

Near the hospital, about a dozen Union men were sitting upon the ground, around a fire of sticks and limbs, trying to "cook coffee." They had been at the front all day; victory had been won. They were now upon the ground that had been occupied by the enemy in the morning. It was a victory; but such a victory, and at such a cost of human life! The Sergeant's Vow.

It was evening, after one of the greatest battles of the Rebellion. The surviving soldiers of the battle were fatigued, and glad to drop down almost anywhere to rest. Those who had been on the reserve were caring for the dead and wounded, and in the hospital tent those who wore the blue, and those who wore the gray, were groaning with the wounds received in battle and were being treated by the Union physicians.

On the right hand and on the left, in front of them and in the rear, could be seen the dead bodies, dressed in the uniform of the friends and the foe.

They were just taking the coffee from the fire when a soldier came up, and discovering that the dozen men were of his company, said:

"How is it, boys, are you dry?"

"Trying to cook our coffee, Ned," said one of the soldiers, "but I guess that it will be Virginia mud and water mixed together."

"I've got something good," said the first speaker, producing his canteen which had hung across his shoulders.

"What is it?" asked one.

"Whiskey," replied Ned.

"You're a trump."

"That's jolly."

"That is just the stuff.'

"That will revive us!"

And other expressions of satisfaction and pleasure were made by the men.

"Here, Sergeant," said Ned, reaching the canteen toward a tall, noble looking fellow who had been silent, "throw aside your temperance principles for once and take a drink."

"Not any, Ned, thanks," replied the one addressed as sergeant.

"Come, now, you have fought like a tiger all day. You do not know but what you may have to rally in five minutes."

"True, Ned, but excuse me."

"Say, Sergeant," said Ned, "if it is agreeable to the boys, we will adjourn the drink for five minutes, and you tell us how you came to be such an infernal advocate of temperance."

"I second the motion," said another soldier.

"And so do I!"

"And I, too!"

"Well, boys," said the sergeant, "I will tell you. It is a short story, and therefore soon told. When I was nineteen I had to leave school, owing to the death of my father. I came home to help my mother, who needed me. My father had been a prosperous farmer; he had that frugality and sturdy industry characteristic of the Vermont farmers. My mother I always considered the most handsome woman on earth, at least appeared so to me and as a mother there never was one better.

"After my father had been dead about a year, somehow I acquired a passion for hunting, fishing and especially cooning. There was nothing that delighted me so much as it did to take my dog and go out with some of the neighboring boys and bring home a number of coons. One night three of our neighbors came to our house after me. They thought they had found a new place, a corn field, where there was plenty of game. I needed no urging. I kissed my mother good-by, told her that I would not be late, called my dog and away we went.

"One of the boys had a bottle of whiskey in his pocket. Just how it came about I do not know; I had drank a little whiskey before, but that night I drank too much, and became beastly drunk. The boys led me home and left me at the gate, I staggered through and staggered around the yard a little, in a vain attempt to find the steps to the house. I stumbled over something, fell down and was unable to get up. After a little I went to sleep—a regular drunken sleep.

"It seems that in the night, sometime, my mother became anxious because I did not come home. She had not been to bed but had fallen into a slumber upon the couch. She awoke, as I said before, some time in the night, and fearing that harm had befallen me arose from the couch, put her shawl over her head, and started out to find me. And she found me in a condition most deplorable, indeed. At first she thought I was dead, or that I had been brutally treated by a highwayman. But when she stooped down and looked at me and saw, by the moonlight, my face, she knew that her only child was drunk. She tried to waken me; she tried to get me into the house, but she had not the strength. She went to the house and got a pillow, and placed it under my head. She covered me with blankets, she protected my face from the dew by placing an open um-

A NIHILIST LEADER'S RETREAT.

The Home of Professor Pierre Lavroff in Paris.

At the summit of the Rue St. Jacques, some miles away from the centre of gaiety and fashion, and further even than the extreme limits of the Quartier Latin, lives the man of all others whom the Russian Government is most anxious to capture—Pierre Lavroff. Where the pavement is narrow, the streets always muddy, stands a house of more imposing aspect than the surrounding modest dwellings. But it is not here precisely that Lavroff has taken up his abode. We must pass under a large porte cochere, cross a broad yard to reach a smaller structure that stands well away from all the noise of the street, and ascend two flights of dusty stairs, before attaining Lavroff's door. A slight pull at a bell-rope that has seen better days suffices; and in a moment the door is opened by Lavroff himself.

Alone, and without even a servant to protect him, stands the man who exercises the greatest influence among the Nihilists that exile has scattered all over Europe. At once the memory of Fedora suggests the possibility of kidnapping; but then, in spite of his gray hairs, Lavroff seems as strong as Bradlaugh, and the Russian secret police could scarcely hope to remove so formidable an adversary down so many stairs, across so broad a yard, into so busy a street, without attracting attention. The cheery voice, the cordial reception of the menaced exile soon drives away these passing thoughts, and we are at once admitted into the sanctum, a small study, where the four walls are hidden by long rows of books that reach to the ceiling.

There is one comfortable chair for the visitor. If the guests are numerous, then bundles have to be removed to make room; but this inconvenience does not detract from the hearty welcome that betokens the traditions of Northern hospitality. Nor is it possible to mistake the Russian origin of the host. A square face enframed by a square beard and long hair, square, broad shoulders, covered by a long coat of an indescribable gray-brown that reaches to the feet, combine with the military gait of the wearer to remind us of some sketch taken during the siege of Sebastopol. There is a small bedroom beyond the study, and on the other side a lumber-room, where we can obtain a glimpse at huge cases half filled with books. Perhaps these have been collected by the Russian Red Cross Society for the relief of political prisoners, of which Lavroff and Vera Sassoulitch are the joint Presidents.

In Russia he was the first professor who, after the accession of Alexander II., delivered lectures on philosophy; and when in exile, he organized classes at Paris for young Russians on history and sociology.

She covered me with blankets, she protected my face from the dew by placing an open umbrella over me. She drew her shawl tightly around her shoulders and sat down by my side. In the morning I awoke just as the sun was rising, I found her there. Great tears were chasing each other down her cheeks. I saw at once that my mother had cared for me all night. She had faithfully kept her lonely vigil, watching her drunken son, weeping and praying.

"'I am awful thirsty,' I said. My voice sounded strange, and unnatural. I got up; my mother rose, went to the well and brought me a cup of water. As she handed the cup to me she bowed her head that I might not see her grief; but I saw a tear come down her pale cheek and drop into that cup. I took the cup from her hand drank its contents, tear and all. Yes, boys, I drank my mother's tear, and I made a solemn vow that I never again would drink her tears.

"I led my mother into the house; I led her to the arm chair; and as soon as she was seated I got down upon my knees.

"'Mother' said I, 'This is the first. It shall be the last."

"'Charles,' said she, running her fingers through my hair, 'I hope so. God bless you.'

"I looked up, and my mother had fainted. I took her in my srms, as one might take a child, and placed her upon a bed. It was the beginning of what came near being her death. Days, and nights, and weeks I was by that sick bed. I heard her, as her mind wandered, praying for me and pleading for my reformation. And at times she would imagine she was talking to my father. In Russia he was the first professor who, after the accession of Alexander II., delivered lectures on philosophy; and when in exile, he organized classes at Paris for young Russians on history and sociology. The son of a nobleman, he was, as usual in Russia, placed in the army, but at the age of 22 he had already attained the position of professor of higher mathematics in the school of artillery. This was followed by the studies of physical sciences and the contribution of many able papers to the Russian reviews and press. It was not, however, till Lavroff became the principal editor and contributor to an encyclopædia which would give, in the Russian language, information similar in character to Diderot and D'Alembert's historic work, that he was molested by the Government. Sentenced for some verses written against Nicholas I. and Alexander II., he was exiled to the bleak and ice-bound province of Vologda; but after three years' suffering he succeeded in eluding the vigilance of his guardians and ultimately arrived in Paris in 1870. Being a widower his mother alone followed him in exile; but as she is now dead, Lavroff is absolutely alone. During the last sixteen years he has not only been separated from his children, but he has not dared to communicate with them for fear of compromising them.

Lavroff lives by his literary work; it is his principal occupation, his principal joy, and his principal souroe of income. Poor, he contents himself with the modest repasts served in the little restaurants that abound in the Latin quarter: but he is rarely so poor as to be unable to help a friend in distress. She would tell him of the plans she had for her son, and that she hoped be would be a sober man. Every word she said was like a knife cutting me; and many a time I wished that I had died before I had ever tasted liquor. But, thank God, my mother got well. It was a long time before she was able to leave her room. I was her constant companion. Somehow it seemed to me, that her life depended upon my care.

"When the war broke out, I made up my mind that I ought to enlist. I told my mother about it, and asked her advice.

"'Charley' she said, 'I'm afraid to let you go.'

"'Afraid of what, mother,' I asked, 'are you afraid that I will be shot.'

"'Worse than that.'

"'Mother, what can you possibly mean?' I enquired.

"She blushed as she looked me in the face. But her reply was one never to be forgotton.

"'Charley, I am afraid that you will be overpowered by strong drink.'

"'Mother,' said I, 'I solemnly vow by the sacred memory of my dead father that I will never drink another drop of intoxicating liquor without your consent.

"'Then you may go to the war, Charley.' That was her reply, boys. And I tell you what, when I drink an intoxicant, it will be when my mother's own hand brings it me and asks me to drink it."

"Amen!" said several of the soldiers who were listening to the Sergeant's story.

"I say, boys," said Ned. "Here goes the whiskey." Turning the canteen upside down, he emptied its contents on the ground. As the liquor went gurgling out he said, "I've got a mother too, and I'm done with liquor."

"And I, too!"

"And I!"

Every one took the pledge, and it was afterwards said that the men who were gathered around the camp-fire that night were the strongest temperance men in the whole brigade.—The Reformer.

He has also regularly paid his tribute of admiration to the exhibitions organized in Paris by Russian artists; but as on one occasion Tourgenieff got into difficulties with the Russian Government for giving him tickets, he has ceased to visit these collections of paintings. Finally, when in 1882 he helped to create the Russian Red Cross Society, the Government of the Czar procured his banishment from France. Lavroff is still under this decree of exile, and might now be imprisoned for having returned to Paris, but he was privately given to understand that his presence would be tolerated if he did not resume his course of lectures to the Russians residing in France. Now Lavroff's principal occupation is the editing of the European edition of the Will o the People, recently issued in magazine form at Geneva.—From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Killed While Playing Football.

Mr. Geotge Herman, 19, younger brother of the last Senior Wrangler, was engaged in a game of football, at Bath, recently, against the Bristol team, and, in a "maul" with the opposing team, received a severe blow on the head. He was removed from the field, but could not be taken home, and died of apoplexy caused by his injuries, after lingering in an unconscious state for several hours. No blame is attached to any one.

At the inquest it was stated that the game, which was played under Rugby rules, was an exceedingly rough one, no less than four men receiving injuries. Deceased was playing three-quarter back, and had numerous falls. He walked away shortly before the match terminated, and suddenly became unconscious. The medical evidence showed that a large artery had given way within the skull, producing apoplexy. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the evidence, and strongly condemned the Rugby rules.

I was never less alone than when by myself.

LENNOX REFORM ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the Reform Association will be held in Symington's Opera House on NAPANEE, FRIDAY, FEB. 29, 1884.

REFORM MEETING.

We would again remind our readers of the Reform meeting to be held in the new Opera House to-morrow afternoon, to be addressed by Mr. John Charlton, M.P. The chair will be taken at 2 p. m. A meeting of the Reform Association will be held at 1 o'clock, at which a large attendance is requested.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—The proverbial lull after the storm has taken place at Ottawa. Since the close of the debate on the C. P. R. resolutions little more than routine work has been done.

—The cause of temperance is rapidly advancing. The by-law prohibiting the sale of liquor in groceries was carried in Toronto on Monday by the large majority of 360.

—Justice has at last been done Hon. Mr. Mowat by the Imperial Government. The Queen has conferred the honor of knighthood upon him.

—Quebec is after all not over-exacting in asking an additional $1 per head population. The syndicate got $8 per head of the entire population of the Dominion, over and above the $25 per head already given them. Certainly, let Quebec have her millions. What is a hundred millions anyway?

—The new Ontario Government license bill provides for the open sitting of the license boards, for the enhanced severity of penalties and for a measure of local option, the electors of any polling subdivision being allowed by a petition signed by the majority to defeat any application for a license within their subdivision.

—The Hamilton Times truthfully remarks that the Reform party never got better service from a Toronto newspaper than the Globe has given during the past year, but the Toronto World joins issue. It believes the Mail is doing more for the Reformers than the Globe. Probably, but such is not intended.

—When Mr. Blake visited Belleville during the election of 1882 great placards were posted on the Birrell axe factory laudatory of the N.P. There has been a back-action there since. The workmen are now on strike because of a reduction of 17½ and 12½ per cent. in their wages. Probably the men do not now hanker after the N.P. as much as they did in 1882.

—Are the people of Addington satisfied with John W. Bell voting $150,000 out of their pockets as a bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that without even consulting them in the matter? What would the people of Camden or Sheffield say of the reeves and councillors of those municipalities if they took it upon themselves to vote out of the municipal funds $150,000 for a railway in Prince Edward County? We are inclined to the opinion that they would protest most vigorously against such a high-handed act. Yet the reeves and councillors would be doing nothing more outrageous than John W. Bell has done in his vote on the C.P.R. resolutions.

—During the discussion on the C.P.R. resolutions a few days ago Peter Mitchell, M. P., insinuated that Mr. Blake's opposition was because of legal fees he obtained from the Grand Trunk. Mr. Blake in reply said it always pained him to have to refer to his personal affairs, but anybody who knew anything of his practice was probably aware of the fact that when he was engaged in it he made from $20,000 to $25,000 a year, whereas at present his income was only about $2,500 a year. This answer to a most uncalled for attack elicited loud applause, and Mr. Mitchell succumbed. It is well known that Mr. Mitchell's course in the House is not influenced by any great patriotism. He

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—The proverbial lull after the storm has taken place at Ottawa. Since the close of the debate on the C. P. R. resolutions little more than routine work has been done.

—The cause of temperance is rapidly advancing. The by-law prohibiting the sale of liquor in groceries was carried in Toronto on Monday by the large majority of 360.

—Justice has at last been done Hon. David Mills. On Monday last the Supreme Court gave decision in the Bothwell election case giving him the seat usurped by the notorious Hawkins by aid of Jim Stephens, the returning officer. Mr. Mills took his seat yesterday and Hawkins stepped down and out. Nobody regretted his departure. Even the members of his own party latterly treated him with contempt and he sinks into a political retirement in which, it is to be hoped, no party will ever attempt to disturb him.

—The Pacific Railway "loan" of thirty million dollars has become law. There is not the slightest probability that this money, when once it leaves the Dominion treasury, will ever be returned. Let us see what this grant amounts to :—

It means a tax of $150,000 to every constituency in the Dominion.

To Lennox and Addington it means a tax of $300,000.

To every man, woman and child in this county it is a tax of $8.

To every ratepayer it is a tax of between $40 and $50.

Of course the tax is not direct, but it amounts to the same thing in the end. The money comes out of the people's pockets indirectly. Mr. John W. Bell, M.P., when he thus recklessly voted away the people's millions, may have thought that because the tax collector will not demand payment from house to house in his constitutency, that little heed will be paid to his action, but he only insults the intelligence of his constituents by such reasoning. The people of Addington will hold him accountable for this vote and condemn him accordingly.

The people of Lennox are to be congratulated. Although they will also have to pay their full share of the "steal," they have the satisfaction of knowing that they sent a representative to the House who had the manliness and honesty to protest by his vote against this outrageous transaction.

—What will the people of Camden or Sheffield say of the reeves and councillors of those municipalities if they took it upon themselves to vote out of the municipal funds $150,000 for a railway in Prince Edward County? We are inclined to the opinion that they would protest most vigorously against such a high-handed act. Yet the reeves and councillors would be doing nothing more outrageous than John W. Mr. Blake in reply said it always pained him to have to refer to his personal affairs, but anybody who knew anything of his practice was probably aware of the fact that when he was engaged in it he made from $20,000 to $25,000 a year, whereas at present his income was only about $2,500 a year. This answer to a most uncalled for attack elicited loud applause, and Mr. Mitchell succumbed. It is well known that Mr. Mitchell's course in the House is not influenced by any great patriotism. He always has an axe to grind and in the Pacific Railway deal he has personal interest. On the other hand no man in the House has attended to public duties at as great sacrifice as Mr. Blake. He is giving his whole time to the affairs of the country, and by so doing has reduced his annual income from $25,000 to $2,500.

—The estimates of expenditures for the current year were drought down in the Legislative Assembly last week. They show a careful revision of expenditure in many departments. The vote asked $2,224,726.02 for current expenditures, $381,521.17 on capital account, and $40,826.65 for other purposes, making a total of $2,647,073.84. The division of expenditure under the different services is as follows :—Civil government, $178,817.34 ; legislation, $110,350 ; administration of justice, $299,000 ; education, $518,496 ; maintenance of public institutions, $549,754 ; immigration, $31,950 ; agriculture, arts, literary and scientific institutions, $150,290; hospitals and charities, $92,869.18; maintenance and repairs of Governmental and Departmental Buildings, $38,090 ; public buildings, $15,300 on repairs and $183,959.64 on capital account ; public works, $11,550 on repairs and $38,415 on capital account ; colonization roads, $159,145.55 ; charges on Crown lands, $79,400 ; refund account, $40,826.65 ; miscellaneous expenditure, $53,778.50 ; unforseen and unprovided, $50,000.

—A peculiar feature of the McCarthy Act —now called the Great Confusion Act—is that it makes the Wardens of counties and Mayors of cities Commissioners in direct contravention of the Municipal Act, which clearly states that these officers shall not act as Commissioners. Upon accepting the Commissionership these officers become disqualified for the municipal offices mentioned. For this reason Mr. Flynn, Warden of Frontenac, has refused to act on the board for his coun-

Let us enquire a what $30,000,000 means.

The whole wheat crop of Ontari and in that year the wheat crop commonly good one—was, we see sus, estimated at 27,413,091 bu the wheat therefore raised in home consumption as well as fo 1881, at $1 a bushel, would not $30,000,000. If the farmers of ion were asked to lend one year's to the syndicate without any pro turn they would look upon the made the request as fit to be pu house.

Again, the export of agricultu from the whole Dominion last ye ed to $32,818,519. This is not n than the proposed cash loan whic ernment propose to make to Canad Railway Company.

The census of 1881 tells us that in Ontario 473,806 horses. Valu $60 apiece all around, and we hav 360, not quite as much as the peo ada are asked to make the syndi sent of.

The milch cows owned in Ontar 782,543. These at $30 a head worth $23,467,290, not quite a mi than the syndicate ask the Gove lend them in cash.

It is by calculations such as the intelligent electors can form some an adequate idea of the magnitu sums of the people's money which ernment of the Dominion intend away upon the reckless, extravag Railway Company.

stituency in the Dominion.

To Lennox and Addington it means a tax of $300,000.

To every man, woman and child in this county it is a tax of $8.

To every ratepayer it is a tax of between $40 and $50.

Of course the tax is not direct, but it amounts to the same thing in the end. The money comes out of the people's pockets indirectly. Mr. John W. Bell, M.P., when he thus recklessly voted away the people's millions, may have thought that because the tax collector will not demand payment from house to house in his constitutency, that little heed will be paid to his action, but he only insults the intelligenoc of his constituents by such reasoning. The people of Addington will hold him accountable for this vote and condemn him accordingly.

The people of Lennex are to be congratulated. Although they will also have to pay their full share of the "steal," they have the satisfaction of knowing that they sent a representative to the House who had the manliness and honesty to protest by his vote against this outrageous transaction.

—Those over sanguine people who profess to believe that the Syndicate will return the $30,000,000 voted by Parliament at the time appointed, should ascertain the reason why the loan of $15,000,000 to the Grand Trunk made some years ago has not been returned. Not one cent of this money has been returned to the Government, and what is more the interest has not been paid. Nor will it ever be paid, for the reason that the security has become absolutely worthless through other mortgages having been given preference. If the Grand Trunk successfully played this game what is to prevent the Canadian Pacific doing likewise? A Government loan to a railway really means a gift. The people will find this out in due course.

—Hon. A. S. Hardy has given notice in the Legislature of a bill to regulate the fees to be paid for any license taken out under the Dominion Act. The fees are to be fixed as follows:—

On tavern, saloon, or shop licenses in cities	$300
Do in towns	250
On tavern or shop licenses in villages	150
Do in townships	120
On each wholesale license	350
On each vessel	250
Each transfer	20

The McCarthy Act expressly declares that on any license issued under it the Provincial Legislature may impose a tax or fee for provincial or municipal purposes; and also provides that any person entitled to a license under it must first show that he has paid any such fee that the Provincial Legislature may have seen fit to impose. The Toronto World says that "while the province fixes these duties it does so without prejudice in its contention that the right to legislate in respect of these licenses is conferred upon the Provincial Legislatures exclusively. But for fear that the Dominion law may be held to be valid this precautionary measure is taken. It is also the intention of the Government to increase the fees for licenses taken out under the provincial law, though it is not likely that they will be much more than half of the above figures."

istration of justice, $299,000; education, $518,496; maintenance of public institutions, $549,754; immigration, $31,950; agriculture, arts, literary and scientific institutions, $150,290; hospitals and charities, $92,869.18; maintenance and repairs of Governmental and Departmental Buildings, $38,090; public buildings, $15,300 on repairs and $183,959.64 on capital account; public works, $11,550 on repairs and $38,415 on capital account; colonization roads, $159,145.55; charges on Crown lands, $79,400; refund account, $40,826.65; miscellaneous expenditure, $53,778.50; unforseen and unprovided, $50,000.

—A peculiar feature of the McCarthy Act—now called the Great Confusion Act—is that it makes the Wardens of counties and Mayors of cities Commissioners in direct contravention of the Municipal Act, which clearly states that these officers shall not act as Commissioners. Upon accepting the Commissionership these officers become disqualified for the municipal offices mentioned. For this reason Mr. Flynn, Warden of Frontenac, has refused to act on the board for his county. "Another feature of the McCarthy Act," says the Whig, "is that it makes the County Judges in Ontario, License Commissioners. Under both Acts the appeal from convictions lie to the County Judges or to the General Sessions presided over by them. In appeals arising under either Act, or from any conflict of authority between the Acts, these gentlemen will be placed in an unenviable position, one we are sure they do not covet, and many of them, we have it it on reliable authority, have protested against being placed in such an awkward predicament."

—During the trouble the Government was experiencing last week from the recalcitrant Bleus, Hon. John Costigan, Minister of Inland Revenue, handed in his resignation. Next day the Mail poured out its vials of abuse on the Hon. John's head and accused him of having succumbed in a moment of weakness to the enemy, and charged Mr. Blake with intriguing with the Bleus to defeat the Government. The latter charge was promptly refuted in the House by Mr. Ouimet, speaking for the Bleus, and Sir John defended Mr. Costigan and announced that that gentleman had withdrawn his resignation and was again a member of the Government. It was thought after this the Mail would eat humble pie, but this it did not do. It repeated the charges in stronger language than before. The result is that the Bleus are very indignant and Mr. Costigan is much displeased. The Bleus were only got into line on the resolutions by a straight pledge from the Government that the Quebec demands would be granted. The Government, notwithstanding its large majority, is not strong. It is only kept together by satisfying the various factions with large grants from the public treasury. It may hold together until the treasury is empty, but no longer.

She Declares it Saved her Life.

THE CUSTOMS APPOINTMENT.

The following letter was handed to one of the other local papers last week, but publication was "respectfully declined." At the request of the writer we give it a place in our columns :—

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—Notwithstanding the flattering local puffs and the opinions of a few Conservatives who cannot tell black from white, the fact remains that a more generally unpopular selection could not possibly have been made. No one doubts Mr. Elliott's business ability to fill the position, yet to which, as a citizen and a Conservative, he has no claim whatever.

He has only resided in town a few years, was for a time the paid editor of a Conservative paper, and his duties as secretary of the Conservative Association and all other work in connection therewith were paid for. He could not solicit a vote, had no influence, and was decidedly unpopular as a canvasser, yet a few almost insist that he held the fate of the party in the hollow of his hand, and as a reward for "long and faithful services" (?) is placed in one of the best berths in the county at a salary of about twelve hundred dollars a year.

In making this appointment the opinions and claims of men who have been staunch and hard working Conservatives for a lifetime and have stood by their party through thick and thin, and who have taken a most active part in the growth and prosperity of our town and county, are entirely ignored in favour of a mere adventurer.

As Mr. Elliott is now fully installed, there let him rest, but, one thing is certain, the Conservative cause can be greatly benefitted by avoiding these tactics in future.

Yours,

ANOTHER CONSERVATIVE.

WHAT IS A MILLION?

(Cornwall Freeholder.)

By far the greater number of those who advocate entrusting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with $30,000,000 of the people's money have no conception of the greatness of the sum they are talking about. Men who would think it a great misfortune to lose $30 "clean cash" by the bankruptcy of an unfortunate shopkeeper or mechanic, talk like Rothchilds about lending thirty millions to a concern that is not able to pay its honest debts, and whose credit is so bad that it cannot get accommodation in the ordinary way. Let us enquire a little into what $30,000,000 means.

The whole wheat crop of Ontario in 1881—and in that year the wheat crop was an uncommonly good one—was, we see by the census, estimated at 27,413,091 bushels. Again, the export of agricultural produce from the whole Dominion last year amounted to $32,818,519. This is not much more than the proposed cash loan which the Government propose to make to Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

The census of 1881 tells us that there are in Ontario 473,806 horses. Value these at $60 apiece all around, and we have $28,434,360, not quite as much as the people of Canada are asked to make the syndicate a present of.

It is by calculations such as these that the intelligent electors can form something like an adequate idea of the magnitude of the sums of the people's money which the Government of the Dominion intend to throw away upon the reckless, extravagant Pacific Railway Company.

Whether they will be successful in many of their solicitations remain to be seen. The person who depends upon the license issued by the Dominion Government renders himself liable to prosecution by the authorities of Ontario, who will leave no legal means untried to defend their exclusive jurisdiction as expounded by the Privy Council in regard to the licensing power. Even were the Dominion Act held to be legal, the power of levying duties on licenses most clearly remains with the Local Legislature, a fact which the Dominion Act specifically recognizes by providing that licensees shall before securing their license pay the fees fixed by the Provincial Legislature. And the fees which the Government proposes to place upon the licenses granted under the two Acts are such as to make an applicant hesitate before basing his right to sell liquor on the unsubstantial fabric of Dominion legislation in this matter."

A NEW MORAL FROM AN OLD STORY.

[From the Montreal Witness.]

It takes eighteen columns of Sir Charles Tupper's oratory to explain the advantages of the new loan. A short story with a moral will make the transaction clear to those who do not care to wade through this mass of printer's ink.

Some years ago a man entered a country store.

The following dialogue ensued :—

Customer—"What is the price of your best crackers?"

Merchant—"Ten cents a pound."

Customer—"I guess I'll take a pound."

The merchant weighs out the crackers and hands them to the customer.

Customer—"Have you any very good whiskey?"

Merchant—"Yes, it is ten cents a glass."

Customer—"Well, I guess I'll change my mind and give you back the crackers and take a glass of whiskey."

Customer, drinking the whiskey, smacks his lips, says it is good and turns to leave the store.

Merchant—"Hello, you have forgotten to pay for the whiskey."

Customer—"Have I not given you the crackers?"

Merchant—"But you have not paid for the crackers."

Customer—"Did I not give you the crackers back?" and walks out of the store leaving the merchant reflecting on the transaction and wondering where his ten cents came in. Our representatives at Ottawa a few years hence will find out where the joke comes in.

They Called Him "Pa."

Two boys who work in the papers mills at Napanee Mills were before Squire James on Monday charged with using insulting language to a man. The offence consisted of the boys calling him "pa" whenever they met him. Decision will be given next Monday. Is it insulting to be called "pa?" If so there are a good many fond parents insulted every hour of the day.

—The letters R. S. V. P., which are seen at the foot of an invitation in polite society, mean "Repondez s'il vous plait," which is French for "Reply, it you please." These letters appeared after the name of the Mayor of Montreal in the invitation to the Mayor of Boston to attend the Carnival. The secretary of Boston's Mayor did reply, but thinking that the letters meant some title of the party he was writing to, addressed him, "Mr. C. G. B——, R. S. V. P." This reminds us of the story of a plain old country couple who were invited by fashionable relatives in the city to attend a party. The letters R. S. V. P. were translated by them to mean "Remember six, very punctual," and they attended the party several hours ahead of the other guests.

THE ART OF PROLONGING LIFE CONSISTS IN understanding the essential conditions on which the act of life depends. But to reconstruct the human system after it has become physically demoralized by disease, is really to create a new being. Yet, that this can be done is capable of actual demonstration. Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya, by aiding the digestive process, and furnishing the elements of bone, muscle, and nerve, perfects the assimilation of food, and complete nourishment of the tissues; morbid products and humors are removed from the blood, and a healthy process of repair set up, which gradually restores and vitalizes all the organs, according to nature's process of building up the feeble constitution.

The office held by the Kidneys is one of importance. Any clogging or inaction of these organs is therefore important. Kidney Wort in Nature's efficient assistant in keeping the kidneys in good working order, strengthening them and inducing healthy action. If you would get well and keep well, take Kidney-Wort.

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

GRANGE & COULTER

A Reverie.

BY DR. MULVANY.

Is it dusk or is it day
In your bower, love, far away?
Day or dusk within your bower,
It is love's most longed-for hour,
Love that, free or fettered, still Bids his time nor wants his will.

In that bower what should love see,
Were his fiery wings but free?
What intensest joy or pain,
Could his heart know once again,
Might one wild hour once fulfill Love's unfettered utmost will?

Love, what sense of sight or sound
Should that place of tryst surround?
Only the soft lamplit gloom
Of the world shut in our room,
And your voice blest with the free
Far susurrus of the sea!

In that hour, love, would you share
Love's reward, were love but there?
And nor scorn nor shrink to give
All for which he cares to live,
And be his who comes to thee
Far-abiding by the sea!

CHAPTER XV.

From that day Nettie Clare's suggestion and Nettie herself occupied a prominent place in Vance Singleton's thoughts. She had at least offered him one way of escape out of his difficulties, and, though he did not much relish the thought of an actor's life, anything was better than that he was at present leading; and then, little by little, he began to see that any occupation which brought him and Nettie together would sooner or later grow easy and congenial to his taste.

They were not old friends. Six months back he hardly knew Miss Clare by name, and it was the purest accident that brought thosetwo together—the accident, first, that made him useful to the little lame sister in whom the girl's heart was wrapped up, and afterwards the idleness that allowed him to drift into any intimacy that led him away from his dismal home.

The rescue to which Mrs. Clare and her daughter attached an heroic importance, and of which Nettie spoke with such exaggerated gratitude still, seemed to the young man but a simple affair, costing him only one jerk of the muscle and a muddy coat-sleeve—neither more nor less than that.

He happened to be standing outside Victoria Station one very wet and windy night, waiting for a man who had promised to meet him there, and idly watching the proceedings of the people who were fighting over their luggage and for the cabs around. A train from the country was just in, and the usual scene of bustle and confusion was proceeding.

A little to his left, upon the crowded platform, stood a small slight girl whose movements he found himself following

The simple family history was soon told. Mrs. Clare, a faded pretty woman, with a clear soft voice, and the bright brown eyes that Nettie had inherited, had been an actress before her marriage with the young surgeon Robert Clare; but she had abandoned the stage, and settled down to her wifely and motherly duties without regret—though she had never severed her connection with her old friends—a fact that stood her in good stead in the time of her trouble; for, when, after sixteen years of quiet, struggling happiness, poor Robert Clare died quite suddenly in the prime of his manhood, leaving his widow and her two young children totally unprovided for, these warm hearted unconventional friends rallied unanimously around them and did them yeoman's service.

Jenny was, and always would be, a helpless cripple; Mrs. Clare, though still comparatively young, was too broke inn health and spirits to return to the scene of her modest triumphs; but Nettie, with her pretty saucy face, her clear birdlike voice, fresh, tuneful, and strong, her pretty graceful little figure—everything might be hoped for Nettie in her mother's old profession.

So, being carefully drilled, taught, and brought out under most favorable auspices, Nettie in due time made her appearance, took the public fancy in a small way, and became, after a brief apprenticeship, the bread-winner of the small family.

Not a little proud was Miss Nettie of her important position; and, though Mrs. Clare often wondered and doubted whether Robert would sleep quietly in his green grave out on the northern hill if he knew the burden that had been laid on his little girl's slender shoulders, and the fashion in which she bore it, she could not but share the girl's unselfish exultation in her own success.

"You shall be so comfortable, mother, you and Jenny, by-and-by!" the clear young voice would cry, with a little thrill of triumph. "I am quite a 'star' in the provinces already—and presently I mean to be one here."

Perhaps this utter and unselfish absorption in the family interests kept Nettie safely shielded from the baser influences of her strange new life. Certain it is that in an atmosphere in which nine out of ten girls would have deteriorated she kept her brave, frank simplicity of manner, her honesty of speech and thought, absolutely intact. A little harder and shrewder in driving a bargain, a little more independent in action, than if she had grown up a little home-keeping maiden in her father's care, the family bread-winner perforce became, but in no other way did she suffer from contact with the rough outer world. The little actress dropped her tinsel robes to lame sister in whom the girl's heart was wrapped up, and afterwards the idleness that allowed him to drift into any intimacy that led him away from his dismal home.

The rescue to which Mrs. Clare and her daughter attached an heroic importance, and of which Nettie spoke with such exaggerated gratitude still, seemed to the young man but a simple affair, costing him only one jerk of the muscle and a muddy coat-sleeve—neither more nor less than that.

He happened to be standing outside Victoria Station one very wet and windy night, waiting for a man who had promised to meet him there, and idly watching the proceedings of the people who were fighting over their luggage and for the cabs around. A train from the country was just in, and the usual scene of bustle and confusion was proceeding.

A little to his left, upon the crowded platform, stood a small slight girl whose movements he found himself following with amused attention. She was quite young, and looked half boyish in her close-fitting ulster and round felt hat, with her close-cropped curly hair; but she was a thorough little woman of business, and superintended the moving of her numerous boxes and basket-trunks with cool-headed promptitude and decision.

Beside her, clinging closely to her arm, and looking nervously around, stood a pale large-eyed child, warmly dressed in black velvet and fur, with pale yellow hair falling loosely over her shoulders, perhaps to conceal the slight outward curve of the spine. Her face had the wistful peevish look born of incessant pain, and her voice, which was clear and sharp, had a certain fretful ring.

"Where is mother, Nettie?" she said, as the two followed the now completely laden trunk to the station door; and, watching them, Vance saw that one small foot dragged in a pitifully helpless fashion. "Mother said she would come."

"But it is such a wet night, dear, mother is much better at home getting some nice tea ready for us," the elder sister answered cheerfully. "Come, Jenny, get in; you need not wait for the boxes."

She held the cab door open; but the child drew away her hand pettishly, and, screwing up the pale peakish face as though she were about to cry, said, in a sharp accusing tone—

"Mother said she would come; we must wait for her, Nettie. Ah, there she is!"

Forgetting her lameness, she sprang out into the muddy roadway, only to reel and fall right in the track of a heavily laden omnibus, at that moment starting from the station door.

The driver, high perched, and blinded by the thick steaming mist that lay like a veil over all things, saw nothing of what had happened, and really thought the young man drunk or mad when he stopped his plunging horses with a jerk that nearly flung him from his seat.

"You shall be so comfortable, mother, you and Jenny, by-and-by!" the clear young voice would cry, with a little thrill of triumph. "I am quite a 'star' in the provinces already—and presently I mean to be one here."

Perhaps this utter and unselfish absorption in the family interests kept Nettie safely shielded from the baser influences of her strange new life. Certain it is that in an atmosphere in which nine out of ten girls would have deteriorated she kept her brave, frank simplicity of manner, her honesty of speech and thought, absolutely intact. A little harder and shrewder in driving a bargain, a little more independent in action, than if she had grown up a little home-keeping maiden in her father's care, the family bread-winner perforce became, but in no other way did she suffer from contact with the rough outer world. The little actress dropped her tinsel robes to play at home with heart-whole energy the part of loving daughter and devoted sister-nurse.

She was returning from a brief seaside engagement on the momentous evening of her first meeting with Vance, having taken Jenny with her, thinking that the fresh salt breeze might benefit the delicate town-bred child.

"But for you Mr. Singleton, that journey would have had a terrible ending," Mrs. Clare declared one day for the twentieth time, pressing her handkerchief to her eyes; "but for you we should have lost the very light of our existence."

Vance felt as stupid as a man always does feel when he is desperately overpraised for a thing that cost him little or no exertion, and wished he could think of some civil way of "cutting her short." The rather gloomy-looking "light of her existence" came to his assistance by announcing that Nettie had just turned into the street. It was pretty to see howthe worn, unchildlike face brightened, and how furiously the fair head nodded its greeting.

Eveey incident of that by-gone time, of their first meeting, and the quiet fashion in which his chance acquaintance with the Clares had cemented itself into a steady friendship, passed before Vance Singleton as he meditated over Nettie's proposition.

After all, why should he not try the life she led—at least for a while? He was not troubled with shyness; he had a good memory and a strong voice. His young Mentor assured him that these were the only absolutely necessary qualifications for a stage career. There were prizes, she assured him, in this queer profession, and in every other he seemed to draw a hopeless blank. Well—he drew himself together with sudden resolution —coute que coute, he would try this.

Nettie was delighted when he told her his determination, and Mrs. Clare admitted, after some slight demur, that she Forgetting her lameness, she sprang out into the muddy roadway, only to reel and fall right in the track of a heavily laden omnibus, at that moment starting from the station door.

The driver, high perched, and blinded by the thick steaming mist that lay like a veil over all things, saw nothing of what had happened, and really thought the young man drunk or mad when he stopped his plunging horses with a jerk that nearly flung him from his seat.

He swore savagely at first; but, when he saw Vance pick up the unconscious child, his ruddy face grew almost pale.

"Lor' save us! I have not killed her?" he asked, in a husky whisper; and, though Mr. Singleton knew that the horses' hoofs had not even touched the yellow tresses, he could not with any degree of certainty say that the child still lived. She lay like a dead thing in his strong arms, so white and cold and still.

However, she did not die; nor in two or three days' time was she any the worse for the accident, though it was and will always remain a marvel to Vance that the mother and sister did not expire of sheer fright. Jenny Clare was not an attractive child from an outsider's point of view, being peevish and exacting even beyond the privilege of a confirmed invalid; but she was just the light of life to those two lonely women.

Their gratitude for the service rendered them was painfully earnest and sincere, and Vance grew to hate the subject of Jenny's rescue, and half made up his mind to see no more of the people who made so much of a bit of cheap heroism but it was easier to form the resolution than to keep it, as he soon found out, and most afternoons found him listening to Mrs. Clare's gentle chatter, Jenny's querulous complaints, or the shrewd laughing philosophy of Nettie herself.

He did not understand the fascination that shabby London lodging had for him nor how he came to listen with such exhaustless interest to Mrs. Clare's oftentimes long and rambling anecdotes of their strange and chequered existence, to bear so patiently with Jenny's whims, to feel that all his troubles and vexations of some civil way of "cutting her short." The rather gloomy-looking "light of her existence" came to his assistance by announcing that Nettie had just turned into the street. It was pretty to see howthe worn, unchildlike face brightened, and how furiously the fair head nodded its greeting.

Eveey incident of that by-gone time, of their first meeting, and the quiet fashion in which his chance acquaintance with the Clares had cemented itself into a steady friendship, passed before Vance Singleton as he meditated over Nettie's proposition.

After all, why should he not try the life she led—at least for a while? He was not troubled with shyness; he had a good memory and a strong voice. His young Mentor assured him that these were the only absolutely necessary qualifications for a stage career. There were prizes, she assured him, in this queer profession, and in every other he seemed to draw a hopeless blank. Well—he drew himself together with sudden resolution —coute que coute, he would try this.

Nettie was delighted when he told her his determination, and Mrs. Clare admitted, after some slight demur, that she thought the choice a wise one. They both agreed that, until he had achieved at least some measure of success, it would be well to say nothing at home of the bold step he had taken.

"People are so prejudiced," Nettie said, with a sage shake of her crisp brown curls and a little scornful pout of her cherry-red lips that made her look very like a naughty defiant child and more bewitchingly pretty than ever.

"And very wise and good people too, dear," her mother interposed, in mild correction. "Your own father, I fear——" Her voice faltered, and she bent her head a little to hide the dimness of her eyes, Vance thought; but, before either of them could speak, she went on quickly, "I think Mr. Singleton is quite right, Nettie; prejudice apart, it will be a much easier and pleasanter thing to say, 'I have succeeded in my profession; look at the solid results!' than merely to mention that he intends to adopt a mode of life utterly unknown to them, and held by their world in very slight esteem."

"Exactly so," the young man agreed, with grateful eagerness—it was delightful to have his own vague floating ideas so charmingly put. "And, if I make an utter failure, it will be so much easier and pleasanter not to mention it at all."

"Ah, but you will not fail!" Nettie said, with consoling decision; and so the bond was signed and sealed, and the most important step in Vance Singleton's life was finally taken.

tions he worked like a Trojan. Perhaps to the uninitiated it may seem that the life for which he was preparing was such more child's-play that his exertions were superfluous and unnecesasry. Never was greater mistake made. Unflagging exertion, inexhaustible patience, and an attention that never wandered from his task—all these his instructresses exacted, and all these he tried to give, with the satisfactory result of pleasing them at last.

"A short country engagement, and then for town and fame!" Nettie said, with real triumph in her tone; while Mrs. Clare added, as her quota of the reward of merit—

"And then you can reveal your secret and astonish the family circle at home."

Vance shuddered a little at the closing words, which were by no means so pleasant as poor Mrs. Clare thought. In his mind's eye the young fellow saw a grotesquely horrible picture of the consternation produced by his words—Captain Bruce's gray pallor, Cristine's icy disgust, his mother's ready tears and wail over the disgrace he had brought upon them all. He could not even count on Nora's sympathy, for, since Arthur Beaupre's death, Nora had grown not hard, but cold and strange and apathetic, so that nothing seemed to rouse or interest her.

When he reached home that night, he fully expected to be questioned as to his long absence, badgered, suspected, and rendered generally uncomfortable: but, for once, no one seemed even to know that he had been away. One absorbing interest pervaded the whole house and swallowed up all other considerations. Lord de Gretton had proposed to Nora, and had been accepted. Vance could hardly believe his ears when, almost before he had time to remove his overcoat or exchange a greeting word with her, his mother told him, in tones that literally trembled with excess of joy and pride, what she called "the great and glorious news."

He stared at her for a second or so; her flushed face, her sparkling eyes, the feverish excitement of her whole manner, forebade the idea that she was simply jesting; and yet, if it were not a joke, what was it?

"How stupid you are, Vance!" she said sharply. "It is well I prepared you. I hope you will be readier with your congratulations to the future Lady de Gretton."

"Lord de Gretton!" Vance repeated slowly—and for once he looked exceedingly stupid; for he could not collect his wandering wits or take in the strange idea at all. "Lord de Gretton! Why, he is as old as the governor, and as wicked as——"

"For shame, Vance!" she interrupted, ing of his step-sister in the weeks preceding her marriage.

His intense instinctive dislike to Lord de Gretton made him very unwilling to cross the threshold of the fine South Kensington house that, though nominally taken by Captain Bruce, he knew was provided by the bridegroom-elect. Moreover, it hurt him to see Arthur Beaupre's promised wife by this new lover's side—for, despite his reckless ways, Vance Singleton was strangely loyal at heart.

And he had plenty to occupy him at that time. The modest engagement of which Nettie spoke had been secured, and, despite the unaccountable nervousness that came upon him at the last moment, his first appearance had been a decided success, and the easily-elated youg fellow was filled with glowing hopes for the future, hopes that were not wholly concerned with his professional advancement.

He had played with fire, never dreaming of the result, and suddenly he found that he was scorched. He had congratulated himself on his firm friendship with Miss Clare, and found quite suddenly that he was desperately in love.

The shock dazzled him. Their relations had been anything but sentimental. Nettie had been the hard task-mistress, the sage adviser. He had seen her flirt openly with others. Never had she flirted with him; and yet——

It was on the night of his successful debut that he knew his fate. His heart beat with disagreeable quickness as he glanced across the room and saw the bright little creature chatting and laughing with a tall good-looking man in evening dress. He was the critic of a powerful daily newspaper, Vance afterwards knew, and had come round behind the scenes to congratulate her on her great success.

Vance thought he might have paid his compliments with less enthusiasm and warmth, and felt the strongest possible inclination "to punch his straw-colored head." But unluckily he could hit upon no pretence for interfering, so he had to content himself with retiring into the remotest corner of the green-room, and scowling at the unconscious Nettie across the parti-colored and ever-shifting crowd.

That is, he thought her unconscious then, for the brilliant hazel eyes never once wandered in his direction, and the girl's whole attention seemed given to her companion's silver speech. But afterwards, when the piece was over and the loungers were gone, when the two young people were walking home through the gas-lighted thoroughfares and quieter moonlit streets that led to her mother's lodgings—when they two were alone together, he found out his mistake.

They walked on in unusual silence for a little time—she because the coolness of the spring air refreshed and revived her

"For shame, Vance!" she interrupted, with an angry frown. "A man should scorn to repeat the gossip of the scandalmongers. Lord de Gretton is a gentleman in the best sense of the word. And, as for the slight disparity of years between them, dear Nora is too sensible a girl not to see that that only enchances the compliment he pays her. It is on the right side, and makes him in every way her superior, as her lord and master should be."

"And Arthur Beaupre—has she forgotten him?" the young man ventured, when at last, for lack, not of words, but breath, Mrs. Bruce came to an abrupt pause.

"Forgotten him? No. But she cannot wail out her life besides his grave. Don't be so ridiculously sentimental, Vance. I cannot argue with a person so absurd."

Vance was not sorry to drop the subject. If Nora's had not been real love and real heart-grief, then woman's tears were worth nothing, and women themselves worth little more. And somehow he was specially unwilling to think ill of women just then. If Nora had forgotten her brave young lover and consoled herself with a battered coronet so cruelly soon, why, Nettie Clare might be less frank and honest than she seemed!

The reflection irrevelant and illogical as it was, vexed and irritated him. He met Nora coldly, and proffered his congratulation with an ill grace that seriously annoyed his mother and delighted Cristine, who was boiling over with spite and envy, and credited him with a full share of her own agreeable feelings.

Nora however did not seem to heed his displeasure. Just as he left her he found her, coldly composed, apathetic, and indifferent, The only change was in the great diamond ring that glittered on her little finger, and the extreme deference and attention with which she was now treated.

When he made the bridegroom's acquaintance, Vance set him down in rough and ready fashion as a supercilious snob, desperately in love with Nora, and prepared for her sake to extend a haughty toleration to all connected with her, even at first to him, though he was unmistakeably the bitterest pill of all. And he hardly wondered at that, for he hated the sight of his lean gray face and cruel crafty eyes, hated the thought that he would take poor Arthur's place; and so he made himself offensive to him of malice prepense. And Lord de Gretton returned once wandered in his direction, and the girl's whole attention seemed given to her companion's silver speech. But afterwards, when the piece was over and the loungers were gone, when the two young people were walking home through the gas-lighted thoroughfares and quieter moonlit streets that led to her mother's lodgings—when they two were alone together, he found out his mistake.

They walked on in unusual silence for a little time—she because the coolness of the spring air refreshed and revived her after the heated atmosphere of the theatre, and she thought only of breathing it freely; he because an unusual shyness and a somewhat sulky dignity oppressed him. Vance was angry with her, yet so fully conscious that his anger was unfounded and absurd that he did not dare to speak it.

Suddenly Nettie broke the stupid silence with a merry little laugh.

"Do you know you did very well to-night, Vance?" They had long dropped all titles of ceremony in their easy friendly intercourse. "Mr. Burgoyne was inquiring quite anxiously about you."

"Mr. Burgoyne was very kind," Vance snarled.

"Oh, Vance, how ungracious you are," Nettie said quickly, "and"—with the little air of prudent foresight that sat with such charming quaintnesss on the small girl-face—"how imprudent also. Don't you know that Mr. Burgoyne is not only a critic, but an author? He writes comedies with modern gentleman heroes. Only think, Vance"—opening the big hazel eyes delightedly—"what a chance for you? I am quite sure, when he was talking to me to-night, and you were scowling like a demon at the unfortunate young man, that he was thinking how he could secure you for his new piece."

The innocent pleading tone, the unconscious revelation of her words, went straight to Vance Singleton's heart, thrilling it through and through with the absurdest estacy.

How to Reduce One's Weight

A woman weighing 200 pounds called on a physician for advice. He gave her the following instructions:—

1. For breakfast eat a piece of beef or mutton as large as your hand, with a slice of bread twice as large. For dinner the same amouut of meat, or, if preferred, fish or poultry, with the same amonnt of farinaceous or vegetable food in the form of bread or potato. For supper, nothing.

2. Drink only when greatly annoyed with thirst; then a mouthful of lemonade without sugar.

3. Take three times a week some form of bath in which there shall be immense perspiration. The Turkish bath is best. You must work, either in walking or some other way, several hours a day.

4. You must rise early in the morning

Vance was not sorry to drop the subject. If Nora's had not been real love and real heart-grief, then woman's tears were worth nothing, and women themselves worth little more. And somehow he was specially unwilling to think ill of women just then. If Nora had forgotten her brave young lover and consoled herself with a battered coronet so cruelly soon, why, Nettie Clare might be less frank and honest than she seemed!

The reflection irrevelant and illogical as it was, vexed and irritated him. He met Nora coldly, and proffered his congratulation with an ill grace that seriously annoyed his mother and delighted Cristine, who was boiling over with spite and envy, and credited him with a full share of her own agreeable feelings.

Nora however did not seem to heed his displeasure. Just as he left her he found her, coldly composed, apathetic, and indifferent, The only change was in the great diamond ring that glittered on her little finger, and the extreme deference and attention with which she was now treated.

When he made the bridegroom's acquaintance, Vance set him down in rough and ready fashion as a supercilious snob, desperately in love with Nora, and prepared for her sake to extend a haughty toleration to all connected with her, even at first to him, though he was unmistakeably the bitterest pill of all. And he hardly wondered at that, for he hated the sight of his lean gray face and cruel crafty eyes, hated the thought that he would take poor Arthur's place; and so he made himself offensive to him of malice prepense. And Lord de Gretton returned the compliment with interest.

Vance understood him, Mrs. Bruce, and Cristine well enough; but Nora puzzled him sorely. If she had frankly shown any pleasure in the costly gifts Lord de Gretton heaped upon her, or any interest in the brilliant future opening out before her, he would simply have scorned and forgotten her. Had she made any struggle to escape her quickly-coming doom, he would have helped her as far as in him lay. But she did neither. The gifts moved her to no more interest or gratitude than an idol shows when such are laid upon his shrine, and she gave no sign of shrinking even when they fixed the wedding-day. Afterwards he knew that he at least should have heeded the warning thus given, and saved the desperate girl from the horror to come—should have known that that terrible calm foreboded as terrible a storm. But he was as blind as the rest, and, like those she had loved and trusted less, he left her to her fate.

CHAPTER XVI.

It was part of the miserable fatality that cut Nora off from all hope and help at that time that Vance saw next to nothing with such charming quaintness on the small girl-face—"how imprudent also. Don't you know that Mr. Burgoyne is not only a critic, but an author? He writes comedies with modern gentleman heroes. Only think, Vance"—opening the big hazel eyes delightedly—"what a chance for you? I am quite sure, when he was talking to me to-night, and you were scowling like a demon at the unfortunate young man, that he was thinking how he could secure you for his new piece."

The innocent pleading tone, the unconscious revelation of her words, went straight to Vance Singleton's heart, thrilling it through and through with the absurdest estacy.

How to Reduce One's Weight

A woman weighing 200 pounds called on a physician for advice. He gave her the following instructions:—

1. For breakfast eat a piece of beef or mutton as large as your hand, with a slice of bread twice as large. For dinner the same amouut of meat, or, if preferred, fish or poultry, with the same amonnt of farinaceous or vegetable food in the form of bread or potato. For supper, nothing.

2. Drink only when greatly annoyed with thirst; then a mouthful of lemonade without sugar.

3. Take three times a week some form of bath in which there shall be immense perspiration. The Turkish bath is best. You must work, either in walking or some other way, several hours a day.

4. You must rise early in the morning and retire late at night. Much sleep fattens people.

5. The terrible corset you have on, which compresses the centre of the body, making you look a good deal fatter than you really are, must be taken off, and you must have a corset which any dressmaker can fit to you—a corset for the lower part of the abdomen—which will raise this great mass and support it.

She followed the advice for six months and trained herself down to 152 pounds.

A reporter asked a Chinaman if he expected to marry. The wicked heathen made answer: "Me mallee? No, sir. Mallee no funee; blette funnee single man, alle same Melican man."

A little 6-year-old witness at court proved her right to be sworn by saying that she went "regularly to church and Sunday school and once to a church fair."

"Dear me!" cried Mrs. Blossom, as she laid down the paper, "it does seem to me as if state militia fellows are always in trouble. Here's an account of a recent inspection where the company turned out fifty-three men. Too bad, ain't it?"

Economical Paint.

A paint for floors, which economizes the use of oil colors and varnish, is described at much length in the Builder, as a recent German invention. For flooring, two and one-eighth ounces of good, clear, joiners' glue is soaked over night in cold water, and, when dissolved, is added, while being stirred, to thickish milk of lime, heated to the boiling point, and prepared from one pound of quick lime. Into boiling lime is poured—the stirring being continued—as much linseed oil as becomes united, by means of saponification, with the lime, and when the oil no longer mixes there is no more poured in. If there happens to be to much oil added, it must be combined by the addition of some fresh lime paste—about half a pound of oil for the quantity of lime just named. After this white, thickish, foundation paint has cooled, a color is added which is not affected by lime, and, in case of need, the paint is diluted with water, or by the addition of a mixture of lime water with some linseed oil. The substance penetrates into the wood and renders it water-resisting.

New Rope Material.

The manufacture of rope from asbestos is, it would seem, likely to become an industry of considerable importance, being already produced as a commercial commodity in England, the strength of the article being estimated at about one-fourth that of ordinary hemp rope of the same diameter. Rope of this material, of one and a half inch in diameter, is stated to have a breaking strength of one ton, and twenty feet of it are calculated to represent a weight of thirteen and one-fourth pounds. Some of the purposes, as enumerated, to which this kind of rope is especially adapted are theatres, fire brigades, and ready means of escape from dwellings and public buildings—its advantage in this connection being that it will not break and drop its burden if the flame bears upon it. It is made like ordinary rope, and is spun from Italian asbestos thread.

A Winter Garden.

A correspondent of an English contemporary, speaking of the great variety and number of evergreen trees and shrubs cultivated in England, says: "One might make a very beautiful winter garden, full of warmth and color, even without flowers." This is true, not only in England, but in the United States, and it is a pity that so few farmers and others having room for growing trees about their homes ever think of the winter appearance of

A SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

Diabolical Work of a Band of Armed Men in Hot Springs, Arkansas.

A terrible tragedy was recently enacted at Hot Springs, Ark. Three brothers, Frank, Jack, and William Flynn, were proceeding home in a hack, when a party of seven men, armed with double-barreled shot-guns and Winchesters, stepped out from the door of a saloon and opened fire. The Flynns were armed, but the attack was unexpected. Jack Flynn was shot through the forehead by a ball from a Winchester rifle, and died in a few minutes. William Flynn was shot through the breast with a Winchester, and is probably fatally injured. Frank Flynn received a shot through the hand, inflicting a slight wound. Frank Hall, the driver of the hack, was shot through the back of the neck, and died an hour afterward. Robert Hargreave, a bystander, was shot through the breast, and will probably die. J. H. Craig, a prominent lumberman, received a charge of buckshot through the back; his condition is considered precarious.

The difficulty originated some weeks ago, on account of Frank Flynn endeavoring to prevent Doran from opening a gambling-house. It culminated at the time in Doran making a cowardly attempt to assassinate him, failing in which he fled the city, and returned secretly a few nights ago. Flynn was unaware of his presence in the city till the fatal volley was fired on him.

Intense excitement prevails, and there are strong threats of mobbing the prisoners. The seven men were arrested, and are now in jail. They are S. Doran, two Priutt brothers, Howell, and three others.

The citizens are loud in condemnation of the murderous and cowardly act. Judge Wood has been telegraphed to by leading citizens requesting him to adjourn court at Malvern and return here and hold a special session to try the murderers. If he consents, the law will probably be allowed to take its course. If he does not, the citizens boldly threaten to burn the jail and hang the prisoners.

Some two years ago Frank Flynn, James Lane, Charles Watson, and Louis Goodman were engagod as partners in a gambling-house. Dissensions arose, and the firm was dissolved. Lane continued the business, while Flynn and Goodman opened a rival house. Lane, jealous of its growing popularity, began to circulate rumors affecting its character. Flynn remonstrated with him and threated to break him up unless he ceased. Lane, however, continued to circulate his reports until Flynn and Goodman closed their house. Flynn then took steps to clese Lane's house, and succeeded so well as to financially ruin him. Lane left the

A correspondent of an English contemporary, speaking of the great variety and number of evergreen trees and shrubs cultivated in England, says: "One might make a very beautiful winter garden, full of warmth and color, even without flowers." This is true, not only in England, but in the United States, and it is a pity that so few farmers and others having room for growing trees about their homes ever think of the winter appearance of their surroundings. As a rule, they are bleak, bare, and uninviting in appearance in winter, no matter how elegant or costly the dwelling or outbuildings, in consequence of the absence of the green leaves and graceful forms of evergreen trees. This need not be, because we have an abundance of evergreen trees of almost every conceivable form of growth and shade of color, that will thrive in the Northern States, where they are most needed, not only to improve the appearance of the country homes, but to shield them from the cold blasts of winter.

Vitality of Seeds.

The seeds of some kinds of plants doubtless retain their vitality for many years, especially when buried in the earth beyond the ever varying temperature of its surface. But that there are any seeds which will remain sound for two or three thousand years under any conditions, as is often claimed for the so-called mummy wheat, there is at least much room for doubt, and there is no proof that any such long preserved grain was ever made to germinate. We often hear of strange plants springing up from soil dug out of excavations for railroads or canals, or out of cellars, but we do not know of a single instance of what some persons have been disposed to consider spontaneous generation, and others the sprouting of long buried seeds, in which the plants appearing under such conditions did not belong to some species common in the neighborhood. A few years ago Dr. H. Hoffman, of Germany conducted a series of experiments to determine whether there were any seeds in soil or earth taken from excavations made ten or more feet deep in an old and long settled country, but he utterly failed to find any; hence we must conclude that the idea of seed retaining their vitality for hundreds of years under any conditions whatever is not supported by facts.

Flynn then took steps to clese Lane's house, and succeeded so well as to financially ruin him. Lane left the city and went to New York, still retaining his interest here. About six months ago he returned and openly boasted that he would soon have a man here who would open his house or would have Flynn's blood. It was soon discovered that this man was one S. Alex. Dean, a man whose record has been one of blood and crime in Tennesse, in Texas, and elsewhere. He has killed several men. Doran arrived here some moths ago, penniless. It was known to Flynn that he was desperate. Doran, with two brothers, opened a gambling-house. Flynn, through legal measures, endeavored to suppress it. A few days afterward Doran met Flynn, and without a word drew a pistol and began to shoot. Flynn's right arm was crippled, and he retreated to a neighboring store. An officer interfered and both parties were arrested. Subsequently Flynn was placed under a peace bond of $5,000. Doran left the city and returned surreptitiously Tuesday, accompanied by two or three companions. His presence has been kept concealed. Flynn was unaware of his presence until the fatal volley was poured in. As soon as the hack was fired into, Frank and William Flynn jumped from the vehicle, and opened fire on their assailants, but without affect. The names of the prisoners now confined in jail are S. A. One of the proudest titles of the King of Siam is "Lord of the White Elephant." According to Mr. Bock, he was quite an albino, the whole body being of a pale reddish-brown color, with a few white hairs on the back. The iris of the eye, the color of which is held to be a good test of an albino, was a pale Naples yellow. He was blessed and baptized in the presence of the King and the nobility. One of the high priests presented him with a piece of sugar cane, on which was written the elephant's name in full, and which he very readily ate. The following is a translation of his description, painted on a red tablet, hung over one of the pillars of his stall: "An elephant of beautiful color; hair, nails, and eyes are white. Perfection in form, with all signs of regularity of the high family. The color of the skin is that of lotus. A descendant of the angels of the Brahmins. SOLEMN SMILES,

A New York pastor preached the other Sunday on "The Shameless Age." It was probably a hit at some of the 60-year-old ballet dancers.

An exchange says that Noah was the first pitcher on record, He "pitched the ark within and without." The game was finally called on account of the rain.

A western woman prayed for money and found it. As though this was a miracle! We know of several eastern men who have preyed for money and found it.

And now it is proposed to tax the game of poker. It is supposed that the move aims at the speedy abolishment of the congressional prayer-meetings of Washington.

An exchange says a little 4-year-old listened attentively to a Scandinavian preacher last Sunday, and then whispered: "Mamma, if Dod tan understan' zat, He's a dood one."

Widow Van Cott says: "No Christian can afford to use tobacco." Tobacco is awfully high, that's a fact. We hope Mrs. Van Cott will use her influence to have the tax reduced.

One of Wilkie Collins' latest popular tales is entitled "She Loves and She Lies." Wilkie would have shown more familiarity with human nature if he had put it "She Loves and He Lies."

A timid young man has married a lady whose weight verges closely upon two hundred pounds. "My dear," he says to her, "shall I help you over the fence?" "No," says she to him; "help the fence!"

"Is it possible, miss, that you do not know the names of some of your best friends?" inquired a gentleman of a lady. "Certainly," she replied; "I don't even know what my own will be a year hence."

A little boy at a presbytery examination was asked: "What is the meaning of regeneration?" "Oh, to be born again," he replied. "Quite right, Tommy; you're a very good boy. Would you not like to be born again?" Tommy hesitated, but on being pressed for an answer, said: "No." "Why, Tommy?" "For fear I might be born a lassie!" he replied.

SIGHTS IN HONG KONG.

Frightful Dissipation of the British Sailors—Never-Ceasing Revelry.

One of the first things I noticed upon landing in Hong-Kong was the dissipation which is always going on. At first I thought some celebration must be in progress, but upon making enquiries I was assured that such was not the case.

"It is always so," said a citizen. "Every day a certain number of sailors are allowed to come on shore, and they avail themselves fully of this privilege. As there are some two thousand of these sailors at present on board the men of war in Hong Kong harbor, this city is quite lively most of the time. It is the men aboard these war-ships who get the wildest, for the enforced idleness of their life breeds recklessness when once they getas hore.

These sailors are beardless young fellows for the most part, and though they have a swaggering and tyrannical mien, I should not think that they would impress the Chinese as very formidable. Walking about the streets last evening in company with a citizen, I saw literally hundreds of these sailors, crowding the saloons so thick that you could not see the counter. Outside of the saloon the street would be packed with rickishas, for a sailor gravitates toward a richisha the first thing upon coming ashore. He does not have to gravitate far, for the Chinese runners almost attempt the perilous feat of walking on the water in their eagerness to meet the sailors half-way.

Soon after landing the sailors gravitate toward a saloon, and numbers breeding reckless jollity, it is not long before they cease to be free moral agents. Then they curse and beat their rickisha men, and ride about with scarce any cognizance of whither they are being carried. As I have before intimated, I am implacably opposed to the Chinese ; yet my indignation was kindled in their behalf at first when I witnossed the brutality with which they are treated by these sailors. But my commiseration was dissipated when my friend said :

"Don't pity them. John Chinaman is under now, but he will be on top pretty soon. Wait till the sailors get stupidly drunk, and they will be ignominiously dumped out by the wayside, while these long-suffering 'heathen Chinese' will proceed complacently to go through their pockets. Don't misplace your pity."

"Don't the English make any effort to check this evil?"

"Oh no, it is so common that they don't care to interfere. Once in a while, when a man gets to smashing things too generally and eudangering people's lives, he will be locked up until he gets sober. But so long as they only injure themselves, no matter if they do break the

Summary of Foreign, Domestic, and War Items.

UNITED STATES.

Twenty-nine constitutional amendments have been introduced during the present session of Congress.

The United States Senate has passed a bill appropriating $1,000,000 to continue the Mississippi River Improvements.

The Pension Appropriation bill makes available for the year ending June 30 next $80,000,000, or $25,000,000 less than was asked for.

Mrs. Valeria G. Stone, who gave away a large fortune to educational and religious institutions, died at her home in Malden recently.

It is said that fourteen thousand men are now at work upon the Panama Canal. The dry season has set in, and hopes are entertained that much progress will be made this year.

The charge against a California Judge is of frivolity, and the specification is that he puts his hair in papers every night, woman fashion, to make it curl when he is on the bench next day.

The Congressional public lands committee has unanimously agree to recommend the forfeiture of about 14,000,000 acres of land granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad in New Mexico and Arizona.

The Kentucky whiskey manufactureres have agreed to reduce the production of whiskey, for the year 1884, to two-thirds of the average of the past two years. There will, however, be enough to go round.

Secretary Folger has already redeemed nearly thiry millions of the 3½ per cents included in the 121st call, which leaves only $911,000 of these bonds outstanding. There are about $255,000,000 of the three per cent bonds uncalled and outstanding, in addition to the bonds embraced in the 125th call, which was issued last Saturday for $10,000,000 more.

Dwellers in the valley of the Connecticut River declare that river and its tributaries have dried up before their very eyes, the general run of the streams being but a fraction of what it was forty years ago, while the spring freshets are at least as great as they ever were. This is doubtless due to the cutting off the forests in Vermont and New Hampshire.

I notice that very frequently, almost always, the sailors will give the order, "Go to the Temperance hall," when they are well under the "influence," and there sleep off their booze. By the way, curious though the statement may seem, the manager of the Hong Kong institution is getting to be a confirmed sot. He has been inebriated now for a full week. The moral sentiment that will tolerate such a thing puzzles me.

Despite all the abuses to which they are subjected, however, these temperance halls of the Orient are institutions, and really do a great deal of good. They may be found in Shenehai, Honk Kong, Singapore, Madras, Bombay, Calcutta, Yokehama, Kobe, and, for aught I know, in all the cities of the far east. For $1.25 a day sailors and travellers who want to economize are entertained in first class style, and at the end of the year the citizens make up the deficit in running expenses.

A convict who escaped from the Louisiana State prison walked hard all night, and by daylight was forty miles away. Fearing detection by his striped garb, he went boldly into a negro farmhouse, told the owner that he was a circus performer disabled by rheumatism, and offered to swap the costume for any old suit of ordinary clothes. The bargain was made, and the runaway continued his flight in safety.

The Prince Edward Island fish merchants are again endeavoring to secure recompense for the Dominion Government for losses sustained through the operation of the Treaty of Washington.

Two young fellows were coming down the alley toward the thief and myself, and might have stoppod him at once, but they made room for him to pass, and then spread themselves out, arm in arm, to hinder me, but did not attempt any violence. I upset one of them and got past, but it gave the thief time to increase his lead, and after keeping him in sight for two or three turnings, I finally lost him in the maze of small alleys behind St. Giles' church. I found a policeman, after some trouble, near the Seven Dials, and then gave information at Bow Street Station. Of course I have not heard anything of my chain. There is a comic side to almost all misfortunes. I have said that I only lost my chain, but I was so firmly convinced that my watch was gone also that I did not investigate the contents of my watch-pocket after the affair, but racked my brains to give an accurate description at the police-station of the old fashioned gold watch which I thought I had lost forever. My joy may be imagined when, on nearing home, from mere habit I put my hand to my watch-pocket to ascertain how near it was to dinner time, and found there, safe and sound, my dear old friend and companion. The tug had been so violent that the ring attaching the chain to the watch had given way, leaving the watch behind. The moral of all this is, not to walk about London with your coat not buttoned up."

He fished in this wise. There was a large hole through the log on which he lay, and he thrust his forearm through the hole and held his open paw in the water, and waited for the fish to gather around and into it, and when full, he clutched his fist and brought up a handful of fish, and sat and eat them with great gusto; then down with the paw again, and so on. The brook was fairly alive with little trout and red-sided suckers and some black suckers, so the old fellow let himself out on the fishes. He did not eat their heads. There was quite a pile of them on the log. I suppose the oil in his paw attracted and baited them even better than a fly hook, and his toe nails were his hooks, and sharp ones, too, and once grabbed the fish are sure to stay.

They all Knew How.

I took a large spider from his web under the basement of a mill, put him on a chip, and set him afloat on the quiet waters of the pond. He walked all about the sides of his bark, surveying the situation very carefully, and when the fact that he was really afloat and about a yard from shore seemed to be fully comprehended, he prospected for the nearest point of land. This point fairly settled upon, he immediately began to cast a web for it. He threw it as far as possible in the air and with the wind. It soon reached the shore, and made fast to the spires of grass. Then he turned himself about, and in true sailor fashion began to haul in hand over hand on his cable. Carefully he drew upon it until his bark began to move toward the shore. As it moved the faster he the faster drew upon it to keep his hawser taut and from touching the water. Very soon he reached the shore, and quickly leaping to terra firma he sped his way homeward. Thinking then that he might be a special expert, and an exception in that line of boatmanship to the rest of his companions, I tried several of them, and they all came to shore in like manner.

A SCOTCHMAN'S GOOD FORTUNE.

Falling Heir to a Small Fortune When in Destitute Circumstances.

Among the passengers by the American line steamer British Prince, recently, was a young Scotchman named William Anderson, who, after two years of vicissitudes in this country, returns home to claim an estate left him by his father, amounting to about $30,000. The story of Anderson's experience, as he told it to a Philadelphia Times reporter, is as follows: At the time the tidings reached him he was absolutely penniless, without a place to lay his head, hungry and half-naked. He secured the means to return home from a charitable gentleman of this city, who declines to have his name mentioned. Anderson, who is 26 years of age, left his home, near Inverness, Scotland, about the middle of January, 1882. His father was one of the many prosperous wool-growers in that vicinity, a widower with one son and one daughter. He was a straight-laced Scotch Presbyterian, and his boy William, becoming tired of the restraints put upon him and the drudgery of the work among his father'r flocks, resolved to start out and see the world for himself. He made his way to Liverpool on board of a sailing vessel, arriving there, he says, with £50 in his pocket, a good portion of which had been given him by his sister, to whom he had confided his intention of seeking his fortune in America. He came to this country by the first outgoing steamer, and knocked about New York for a while, vainly endeavoring to secure work. For a time he had employment with a truckman named Bedloe, who has stables near the Bible house, but his fondness foi Scotch whisky soon caused him to lose his place, and he drifted into a furniture-house on Eighteenth street, where he was employed as a porter. While there he wrote to his sister, giving his address, but soon after that he went west, and was for more than a year engaged in herding sheep in Colorado. Becoming tired of this work, he made his way back to Chicago, where he went from bad to worse, working at odd times, drinking hard, and spending many nights in the station-house. There he was taken ill with the typhoid fever, and while in the hospital the Scotch benevolent society interested itself in his behalf, and on his recovery secured transportation for him to New York, Anderson having expressed a wish to return. On his way east he met a fellow-country man who had friends in Philadelphia, and being of a social turn of mind stopped there. He mislaid his ticket, spent what little money he had, lost track of his chance acquaintance, and was soon in a deplorable state of

A MODERN RESURRECTION.

(Detroit Free Press.)

One of the most remarkable occurrences ever given to the public, which took place here in our midst, has just come to our knowledge and will undoubtedly awaken as much surprise and attract as great attention as it has already in newspaper circles. The facts are, briefly, as follows: Mr. William A. Crombie, a young man formerly residing at Birmingham, a suburb of Detroit, and now living at 287 Michigan Avenue in this city, can truthfully say that he has looked into the future world and yet returned to this. A representative of this paper has interviewed him upon this important subject and his experiences are given to the public for the first time. He said:

"I had been having most peculiar sensations for a long while. My head felt dull and heavy; my eyesight did not seem so clear as formerly; my appetite was uncertain and I was unaccountably tired. It was an effort to rise in the morning and yet I could not sleep at night. My mouth tasted badly, I had a faint all gone sensation in the pit of my stomach that food did not satisfy, while my hands and feet felt cold and clammy. I was nervous and irritable, and lost all enthusiasm. At times my head would seem to whirl and my heart palpitated terribly. I had no energy, no ambition, and I seemed indifferent of the present and thoughtless for the future. I tried to shake the feeling off and persuade myself it was simply a cold or a little malaria. But it would not go. I was determined not to give up, and so time passed along and all the while I was getting worse. It was about this time that I noticed I had begun to bloat fearfully. My limbs were swollen so that by pressing my fingers upon them deep depressions would be made. My face also began to enlarge, and continued to until I could scarcely see out of my eyes. One of my friends, describing my appearance at that time, said: "It is an animated something, but I should like to know what." In this condition I passed several weeks of the greatest agony.

"Finally, one Saturday night, the misery culminated. Nature could endure no more. I became irrational and apparently insensible. Cold sweat gathered on my forehead: my eyes became glazed and my throat rattled. I seemed to be in another sphere and with other surroundings. I knew nothing of what occurred around me, although I have since learned it was considered as death by those who stood by. It was to me a quiet state, and yet one of great agony. I was helpless, hopeless and pain was my only companion. I remember trying to see what was beyond me, but the mist before my eyes was too great. I tried to reason, but I had lost all power. I felt that it was death and realized how terrible it was. At last the strain upon my mind gave way and all was a blank. How long this continued I do not know, but at last I realized the presence

He mislaid his ticket, spent what little money he had, lost track of his chance acquaintance, and was soon in a deplorable state of poverty again. He landed at the Broad street station on Tuesday, Jan. 22, and on the following Saturday he sought lodgings at the Sixth district station-house. In looking over a copy of The Ledger two or three weeks old, which was wrapped around some cold victuals he begged at a back gate, he ran across the name of William Anderson among the advertised letters, and, while doubting that it was for him, he went to the postoffice and applied for it. It was several weeks old and had been sent to his old addrsss in New York. Though the number was correct, the street was given as "North Eighteenth street," instead of "East Eighteenth," and the envelope for this reason was indorsed: "Try Phlladeiphia." It was this letter, from a firm of attorneys at Inverness, which told Anderson of the death of his sister over a year ago and the decease of his father in December, leaving him the sole heir to the property, amounting to £6,000.

The "White Lady."

The German emperor is suffering from a slight cold, which has caused the postponement of some festivities. There would be nothing remarkable about the incident, were it not that it has already been associated with the recent appearance of the famous white lady, whose appearance in the royal castle at Berlin is regarded as a portent of misfortune—generally death—to some member of the house of Hohenzollern. An Imperial cold, accompanied by slight hoarseness, is just enough to save the lady's credit as a true prophet. Her last appearance was upon a more serious errand. On the eve of the death of Prince Waldemar, in the spring of 1879, a sentinel at the old castle was so terribly frightened by her that he fled at once to the guard-room, where he was arrested for deserting his post. On that occasion, we believe, the apparition was declared to be that of Princess Bertha von Rosenberg, who had that time, said: "It is an animated something, but I should like to know what." In this condition I passed several weeks of the greatest agony.

"Finally, one Saturday night, the misery culminated. Nature could endure no more. I became irrational and apparently insensible. Cold sweat gathered on my forehead; my eyes became glazed and my throat rattled. I seemed to be in another sphere and with other surroundings. I knew nothing of what occurred around me, although I have since learned it was considered as death by those who stood by. It was to me a quiet state, and yet one of great agony. I was helpless, hopeless and pain was my only companion. I remember trying to see what was beyond me, but the mist before my eyes was too great. I tried to reason, but I had lost all power. I felt that it was death and realized how terrible it was. At last the strain upon my mind gave way and all was a blank. How long this continued I do not know, but at last I realized the presence of friends and recognized my mother. I then thought it was earth, but was not certain. I gradually regained consciousness, however, and the pain lessened. I found that my friends had, during my unconsciousness, been giving me a preparation I had never taken before, and the next day, under the influence of this treatment, the bloating began to disappear, and from that time on I steadily improved, until to-day I am as well as ever before in my life, have no traces of the terrible acute Bright's disease, which so nearly killed me, and all through the wonderful instrumentality of Warner's Safe Cure the remedy that brought me to life after I was virtually in another world."

"You have had an unusual experience, Mr Crombie," said the writer who had been breathlessly listening to the recital,

"Yes I think I have," was the reply, "and it has been a valuable lesson to me I am certain, though, there are thousands of men and women at this very moment who have the same ailment which came so near killing me, and they do not know it. I believe kidney disease is the most deceptive trouble in the world. It comes like a thief in the night, It has no certain symptoms, but seems to attack each one differently. It is quiet, treacherous, and all the more dangerous. It is killing more people, to-day, than any one other complaint. If I had the power I would warn the entire world against it and urge them to remove it from the system before it is too late."

One of the members of the firm of Whitehead & Mitchell, proprietors of the Birmingham Eccentric, paid a fraternal visit to this office yesterday, and in the course of conversation, Mr. Crombie's name was mentioned.

"I knew about his sickness," said the editor, "and his remarkable recovery. I had his obituary all in type and announced in the Eccentric that he could not live until its next issue. It was certainly a most remarkable case."

Rev. A R. Bartlett, formerly pastor of the M. E Church, at Birmingham, and now of schoolcraft, Mich., in response to a telegram, replied:

"Mr. W. A. Crombie, was a member of my congregation at the time of his sickness. The prayers of the church were requested for him on two different occasions. I was with him the day he was reported by his

On the eve of the death of Prince Waldemar, in the spring of 1879, a sentinel at the old castle was so terribly frightened by her that he fled at once to the guard-room, where he was arrested for deserting his post. On that occasion, we believe, the apparition was declared to be that of Princess Bertha von Rosenberg, who had been dead some four hundred years, and who is troubled by the fact that a charitable bequest of hers has been discontinued. There is a want of logical connection between the matter of the grievance and the occupation of the ghost, but that is a detail which it would be unkind to consider. Princess Bertha always appears in white, with a bunch of keys hanging at her girdle. The other "white lady" has fewer claims on our spmpathy. She was the Countess Agnes, of Orlamunde, who was mistress of a margrave of Brandenburgh and mother of two of his sons. When he became a widower she expected marriage, and as the margrave considered her two sons as obstacles to the union she poisoned them. For this she was bricked up alive in a vault in the palace. Another version is that she fell in love with the prince of Parma, and murdered two daughters who stood between her and the realization of her hopes. The white lady has much exercised the wits of German savants who do not altogether relish the taunt of their compatriot, that the men who have left off believing in Deity begin to believe in ghosts. At least two learned treatises have been written on the subject, and the most enlightened opinion is that the tradition is of mythological origin. The lady's name should be Bertha—or rather Berchta—meaning the bright or shining one—who was a goddess under the regime of Woden, fulfilling many of the functions of Juno Lucina, and being the especial patroness of great families. This, no doubt, is a very satisfactory account of the myth, but then what are we to say about the apparition?—London Daily News.

"Mr. W. A. Crombie, was a member of my congregation at the time of his sickness. The prayers of the church were requested for him on two different occasions. I was with him the day he was reported by his physician as dying, and consider his recovery almost a miracle."

Not one person in a million ever comes so near death as did Mr. Crombie and then recover, but the men and women who are drifting toward the same end, are legion. To note the slightest symptoms, to realize their significance and to meet them in time by the remedy which has been shown to be most efficient, is a duty from which there can be no escape. They are fortunate who do this; they are on the sure road to death who neglect it.

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

The cutter afterwards righted and the horse ran away up John, Bridge and Centre-sts., homeward bound. The horse was caught north of the glass works, no damage having been done.

—Speaking of Miss Ida Van Cortland, shortly to reappear here, the Peterboro Review says:—She is one of the best of those who have visited Peterboro—the best actress who has appeared on the stage here in a long time. Her voice is clear, she pronounces her words distinctly, the inflections of the voice are carefully attended to, her actions are correct and her whole manner is natural and graceful. Miss Annie Bird almost electrified the audience with her singing and recitations and was encored three times.

—The entertainment which the Y. P. M. & L. Society intend to give in the basement of the C. M. Church this (Friday) evening, will be of more than ordinary interest. In addition to the usual first-class programme of readings, recitations and music, both vocal and instrumental, Mr. Libby and Mr. Bowerman have kindly consented to give short explanations—the former of the tides and the latter of the seasons. —The leap year quadrille party held in the Town Hall on Monday evening last was a pleasant affair. About 40 couple assembled and dancing was kept up till an early hour. Supper was served at Mr. Baker's restaurant where oysters, etc., were partaken of.

—Mr. I. J. Lockwood, bookseller, has enlarged his bookstore by taking in the adjoining offices which will enable him to display his stock of wall paper, stationery, etc., to much better advantage. The "East End" bookstore is evidently, notwithstanding the depression, forging ahead.

—Mr. Chester Files has resigned the Reeveship of Newburgh because of a protest having been entered against him on the ground of insufficiency of property qualification. The new candidates are Dr. Aylsworth and Mr. T. B. Stickney, and the issue is as to whether or not a license shall be granted a billiard table in the village.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Allison of Mount Pleasant celebrated their crystal wedding on Thursday evening last. A large number of invited guests was present and all enjoyed themselves in having a good social evening's entertainment. Invitations were sent to friends in town but the storm prevented a number from going.

—The ladies of St. Paul's Church, Adolphulstown, are arranging for a grand dinner and concert in the Adolphustown Town Hall on Thursday next, March 6th, in aid of the proposed new Memorial Episcopal Church. They promise a throughly satisfying spread and an excellent programme. They extend a cordial invitation to the people of Napanee and other parts of the county to be present.

—An American stopping at one of the leading hotels one day this week was noticed comfortably seated in the sitting-room anxiously waiting for something. At 3 o'clock he coolly asked the porter if it was not time for dinner and being told dinner was over and preparations were going on for tea he remarked he had made some miscalculation in the time or got out of his latitude.

—The entertainment which the Y. P. M. & L. Society intend to give in the basement of the C. M. Church this (Friday) evening, will be of more than ordinary interest. —Mr. H. S. Rennock, who is engaged on the N., T. & Q. Railway, has left on exhibition in Mr. A. H. Allison's office a $100 cane. It is a great curiosity of workmanship, being almost completely covered with a large variety of animals engraved on the wood, and is well worth seeing. The work was done by an invalid of South America during his visit to the sulphur springs in Arkansas. Mr. Rennock took the cane with him to the Centennial at Philadelphia, but in all the varieties of walking sticks on exhibition there nothing could be found to compare with the workmanship of this cane.

—Mr. Burrows, Inspector of Gas for Kingston district, has opened an office in the Perry block for the purpose of inspecting consumers' meters and the quality of gas. The apparatus for inspecting the meters are now in, but that for testing the candle power of the gas have not yet arrived. Several meters have already been tested and only has been found incorrect. In most cases the percentage was in favor of the consumers. The apparatus is very interesting and is well worth inspection. Mr. Burrows informs us that the Napanee gas is of excellent quality but requires purifying. The company, acting on his advice, have purchased a purifier and it will be put in shortly. As the gas company in this town owns all the meters they pay the inspection fees. The meter when inspected is good for five years. The government stamp is put on the lid and the penalty for tampering with the meter is $50. In several cases where meters were complained of by customers as too fast they were found a small percentage slow. After the inspection there will be no grounds for complaint.

—We are very glad to announce the coming of the Holman Operatic Comedy Company on Thursday evening next, March 6th. The Company has been re-organized and is now under the management of Mr. G. M. —The License Commissioners appointed under the McCarthy Act for the County of Prince Edward, Judge Jellett, Paul Finley McCuaig and Warden William Anderson, met in the Shire hall, Picton, on Friday last and organized. Judge Jellett was elected chairman and Mr. W. H. Orchard was appointed Inspector, Secretary and Treasurer.

—Forepaugh's great circus is to visit Ontario next summer and will no doubt take in Napanee. Adam Forepaugh burlesques Barnum by making his will and giving $22,500,000 in char ties and public bequests of various kinds. Friend Alex. Jacques, familiarly known as the "Old Man," is again Mr. Forepaugh's advance agent.

Rumors of a Wedding.

It is reported that the petite Captain Abbie Thompson will be wedded in New York on the afternoon of the great Salvation Army banquet to be attended by General Booth. The captain truthfully stated her position when she said, "I will never change my name," as the groom is declared to be Capt. Thompson, A. D. C.—Whig.

Sneak Thieves at Work.

There were some mean sneak thieves on the Bath road last Monday night. Mr. Wm. Gould, who lives about three miles from Kingston, had about 25 fine hens stolen by some parties who travelled by a horse and cutter, whose marks were traced quite easily through the snow. On enquiry at the toll gate it was learned that some parties had driven very quickly through without bells and towards the city.—[Whig.

A Belleville Elopement.

Belleville continues to make history with the traditional seven-leagued boots. Recently the good people of that fair city have passed through several surprises that the local chroniclers called "sensations." They had scarcely recovered from the excitement caused by the "hallelujah wedding" when the reported elopement of the young and handsome wife of a Sidney farmer with a Yankee vendor of patent medicines was bruited about. This made the cap-borders of every ancient dame quiver with emotion, and the younger women said, "Did you ever!" She had no family. The insinuating Yankee, it is alleged, had neither freehold nor capital. He dressed superbly, was quite handsome, and sang like a Brignoli. These qualifications captivated the blooming wife of the Sidney yeoman and won her affections. The injured husband protested, entreated, and commanded, but to no avail. Finally she left her home but returned repentant and affected a reconciliation with her husband.

Mr. Blakely had been unwell for nearly a year, but had only recently been confined to his house, and up to a few days ago he was not thought to be dangerously ill. Mr. Blakely was well and favorably known throughout the county. His manly, straightforward and genial manner made him many friends. He was a successful farmer, and an energetic member of the Canada Methodist Church. He leaves a wife and large family of children. He was sixty-six years of age. Deceased was an uncle of Messrs. Fred. and Robert Blakely of Napanee, who were present at the funeral on Wednesday, which was largely attended.

Fox Hunting.

A fox hunt was held on the ice opposite the steamboat dock at Deseronto on Wednesday afternoon last which attracted a large crowd of people. In the first race six dogs entered belonging to Messrs. R. Woodcock, P. O'Connor, M. Breaugh, A. Brown, M. Barnhart and E. Lambert. The fox had 150 yards of a start and after considerable dodging was captured by Mr. R. Woodcock's hound. Messrs. Alex. Smith and Thomas McCambridge acted as managers. Another fox chase took place afterwards at the same place, Mr. Welt Cronk of Prince Edward County, manager. In this race dogs belonging to Messrs. F. Brown, R. Woodcock, M. Breaugh, M. Barnhart and R. McDonald of Napanee were entered. The fox had about 100 yards start and after a long run he reached the shore and disappeared under a haystack. Quite a number from Napanee attended the hunt.

Dwelling Burned.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on Saturday evening last the dwelling house owned and occupied by Mr. George McGuinness, North Fredericksburgh, just outside of the town corporation, was destroyed by fire. Mr. McGuinness after his day's labors went home and made on a fire in the stove and had supper after which he took his horse and cutter and drove to the residence of Mr. John Chatterson, Clarksville, for his wife and children where they were visiting and when he returned the house was ablaze. The contents were all destroyed not an article being saved. It is supposed the fire originated either from the stovepipes or from a defective chimney. There was an insurance of $300 on the house and $50 on the contents. Mr. McGuinness' loss is about $300—his all. He is an industrious and upright mechanic and on Monday Capt. Collier and Mr. D. C. Jennings started a subscription list for his benefit. The result was the raising of a handsome purse

The chairman in proposing the toast of "The Guest of the Evening" paid a high tribute to Mr. Jemmett and gave expression to the general regret expressed at his departure from the town. Mr. Morgan, manager of the Merchants' Bank, endorsed all the good that had been said of his young friend and added that the bank authorities had a high opinion of Mr. Jemmett's abilities. Mr. Jemmett made a suitable reply, which the Mercury says, afforded gleams of his native off-hand humour. A long list of toasts followed and were responded to by members of the company. In its comments the Mercury says:—"We may add that Mr. Jemmett has, from the time of his arrival in Renfrew, identified himself closely with all its social interests, manly sports, and amusements. His first appearance at a dramatic entertainment exhibited his possession of humorous talents, which have rendered his services in requisition on all similar occasions since, and have made him a favourite with the audiences."

The Late Mr. P. T. Pilkey, B.A.

We lately made mention of the death of Mr. P. T. Pilkey, B.A., in Breslau, Germany. The deceased was well known in this county, having prepared himself for college at Newburgh high school. After completing a most honorable and successful career at Victoria University, he went to Breslau University to complete the career requisite for the degree of Ph. Dr. After one year and four months' absence he was suddenly stricken down with disease and died Jan. 21st, 1884, of inflammation of the lungs. His funeral at Breslau was most imposing and honorable, one thousand students, professors, friends and others following the coffin, which was covered with garlands. The body encased in a beautiful metallic shell, still covered with flowers, was sent home, and passed through Cobourg on Feb. 20th, where the students and fraternity met to do honor to the departed. On Thursday, Feb. 21st a short but becoming memorial service was held at Uxbridge. Addresses were delivered by Drs. Haanel and Coleman, of Victoria, and the coffin further honored by wreathes and drapery from the students and members of the Science Association, was removed by six of his brethren of the association. Rev. A. McCann, of Iroquois, and Father McCann, of St. Michael's, Toronto, attended the funeral. The many friends of Mr. Pilkey in Newburgh, Wilton, and Napanee, while pained to learn of the loss of one so promising, will be pleased to learn that one who, at the high school, showed such worth and honor, at the University carried off the highest honors, and in a far land, among strangers, won the respect, esteem and love of so large a number. His sickness was short and trying, but his death was calm, peaceful and hopeful.

Bank here, was on Monday of last week entertained in a handsome manner by the business men and his friends of Renfrew. The chair was occupied by Mr. P. BIBLE SOCIETY.—According to announcement a meeting was held in the M. E. Church, Morven, on Monday evening for the purpose of organizing a sub-branch of the Upper Canada Bible Society. The chair was occupied by the pastor, Rev. S. A. Duprau, who opened the meeting with singing, prayer and reading a portion of scripture. He then explained the object of the meeting and introduced the speakers of the evening. Mr. Black, of Napanee, sec. of the Napanee branch, gave a brief but able account of the working of the society in this province, after which Mr. Bowerman, of Napanee Model School, delivered an eloquent address. He gave powerful arguments in proof of the authenticity of the Bible. He then referred to its influence in civilizing the human race and introducing comfort, prosperity and happiness instead of savage barbarity. Next he presented its claims upon the liberality of those who enjoy the blessings it affords. These gentlemen, by their eloquence and zeal, have succeeded in arousing an interest in the minds of those who heard them in the work of the Bible Society, which we trust will be productive of a hearty response when waited upon by the collectors. The following are the officers for the current year:—President, Rev. S. A. Duprau; Vice-President, Mr. S. B. Phillips; Sec.-Treas., Mr. T. B. German; Committee—Messrs. Ira Raymond, Samuel Bell, Silas Lake; Collectors—western district—Misses Alice Lake and Charlotte Robinson; Eastern district—Misses Ella Bell and Ida Vanslyck.

—Presuming it is a long time since you heard from this place, I thought I would take the liberty of informing you of what is going on here.

—The last days of February caught cold, then relapsed into a blizzard, and expired on the night of the 29th. March is here cold and clear, which means that we are to have two winters in one year.

—The roads are very bad. Travelling is good on the ice, where our local sports occasionally indulge in a "hang-on" and where David takes the cake.

Miller's, for the convenience of all parties concerned, and be called road beat No. 31, and Darius Denison be appointed pathmaster. —Carried. A by-law was then passed appointing pound-keepers and fence viewers for the year. Mr. Post moved, seconded by Mr. Vanalstine, that whereas A. C. Parks, late clerk of this municipality, did of his own motion and contrary to the usual custom with municipal councils, give an order on the treasurer of this municipality for the expenses of holding the last election, or, presented an account for the same in which he received pay for services that we consider he had a right to perform for the salary already voted him, therefore this council regrets that the said Clerk should have taken such a course, and resolves that in future the Clerk shall bring such accounts before the council and have them adjusted before payment is made. On the vote being taken Mr. Post and Mr. Vanalstine voted yea, and Mr. Carscallen and Mr. Hough nay. The Reeve decided in the affirmative and declared the motion carried. Mr. Vanalstine was appointed in conjunction with the road engineer to examine the bridge across Little Creek, near Mr. Brechenridge's, on the county road, and if necessary rebuild said bridge, and report at next meeting. The Council then adjourned till the last Monday in March at 10 a.m.

THE REEVESHIP.—In accordance with a notice for the purpose of nominating a person for Reeve of this place, the free and independent electors met on Friday last to name their man. Both the billiard and non-billiard party were sanguine of success. After calling the meeting to order, the returning officer stated in a brief speech the cause for which the people were called together. Dr. Aylsworth spoke with his usual force and fluency in favor of billiards, stating that the game was a scientific one and perfectly harmless one in itself, but that he did not think the billiard rooms should be unrestricted and thought the village council should pass a by-law to obviate the difficulty. He was followed by Mr. Stickney, who wished to see it out of the village. Mr. A. Caton was the next speaker. He said he believed it was a scientific game, that it was so scientific that it kept young men up till twelve and one o'clock in the morning. Dr. Aylsworth, in replying to Mr. Caton, accused that gentleman of ignorance for saying the game was not scientific. Mr. Caton replied that he just said it was scientific. All who heard Mr. Caton and who wished to be informed as to the true facts of the case must have been delighted with the able and cool manner in which he handled the subject. It is a well known fact to parties living in the vicinity of the billiard saloon that it is open to a very —Presuming it is a long time since you heard from this place, I thought I would take the liberty of informing you of what is going on here.

—The last days of February caught cold, then relapsed into a blizzard, and expired on the night of the 29th. March is here cold and clear, which means that we are to have two winters in one year.

—The roads are very bad. Travelling is good on the ice, where our local sports occasionally indulge in a "hang-on" and where David takes the cake.

—We are to have a joint stock cheese factory, which is being built by Mr. Card, of this place.

—Our school house has been repaired and a few alterations made. The school is progressing favorably under the able tuition of Miss Neely.

—Social gatherings have been in order these long evenings, where music was furnished gratis by a couple of too-toos.

—Boys, keep your hands out of your pockets.

—Leap year—three in a cutter won't do.

—Hamburg is to have an oyster supper. Sillsville, do thou likewise.

—Sunday evening Rev. Mr. Duprau preached to a full house.

—We are sadly in need of a church.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Robert and Miss Ida Asselstine are visiting friends in Moscow.....Mr. Induceum, who has been visiting his uncle here, Mr. A. Sharp, has returned home.....Mr. Albert Lucas, formerly of this place, is dangerously ill. Mumps are the prevailing disorder.

Macdonald.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—I thought I would write you so that the many readers of your valuable paper may see that the good people of Macdonald are still living and patiently waiting to welcome the echoing of the various steamers which ply the waters of the beautiful Bay of Quinte at the opening of navigation.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Edward Rendell has moved from Prince Edward Co. and located once more in our midst on Mr. R. Baker's old homestead..... We very much regret to learn that Mr. Samuel Walmsley has moved from the neighborhood and located in North Adolphustown.....Mr. Wm. German is about to remove from our midst and locate north of Napanee.....Miss Ella Thompson, of Melrose, is visiting at Mr. R. Dingman's, Leap year, Richard; be careful.....Miss Joyce, of Adolphustown, is visiting her uncle, Mr. Geo. Joyce.....Our very efficient school teacher, Miss Connors, though the weather has not been very inviting, has been at her post every day to perform her work of instructing the youth.....Mr. R. Dingman and Thomas McWain drove to Belleville on Sunday morning and returned at night. Short calls, Tommy.

—Owing to the ill health of Rev. Mr. Betts, we have been deprived to a certain extent of our regular appointments at Bethany, but Rev. J. O. Mallory, of Deseronto, has kindly consented to come over and preach to the good people of Bethany Sunday evening next. A full attendance is requested.

MUNCHEAL.—I take this opportunity of informing the Beaver correspondent from Macdonald that he was mistaken or could not have known anything about the council of North Fredericksburgh when he said, "That the council of North Fredericksburgh were sacking all the Tory officers." Now, Mr. Editor, I would like to inform that correspondent that the council did not, nor have not, sacked Tory officers, and I don't think that they intend to sack Tory officers, but that correspondent should have judgment enough to know that when an officer's time has expired and some one been appointed to fill the vacancy of such office, that said officer is not sacked, but

THE REEVESHIP.—In accordance with a notice for the purpose of nominating a person for Reeve of this place, the free and independent electors met on Friday last to name their man. Both the billiard and non-billiard party were sanguine of success. After calling the meeting to order, the returning officer stated in a brief speech the cause for which the people were called together. Dr. Aylsworth spoke with his usual force and fluency in favor of billiards, stating that the game was a scientific one and perfectly harmless one in itself, but that he did not think the billiard rooms should be unrestricted and thought the village council should pass a by-law to obviate the difficulty. He was followed by Mr. Stickney, who wished to see it out of the village. Mr. A. Caton was the next speaker. He said he believed it was a scientific game, that it was so scientific that it kept young men up till twelve and one o'clock in the morning. Dr. Aylsworth, in replying to Mr. Caton, accused that gentleman of ignorance for saying the game was not scientific. Mr. Caton replied that he just said it was scientific. All who heard Mr. Caton and who wished to be informed as to the true facts of the case must have been delighted with the able and cool manner in which he handled the subject. It is a well known fact to parties living in the vicinity of the billiard saloon that it is open to a very late hour and is visited by those noctural beings "who make night hideous."

THE REEVE.—To the joy of the whole village J. D. Ham, Esq., was prevailed on to accept the office by acclamation. Mr. Ham stated if there was a person against him he would not accept, but for the sake of reconciling parties he did so. Mr. Ham will make an able and judicious Reeve. Every one feels satisfied with the appointment. We have the "right man in the right place." Mr. Ham in accepting the office has done honor to Newburgh, and the people have shown their good sense and appreciation of his willingness to serve them in the unanimous manner in which they have elected him to the Reeveship. Mr. Ham is a man who has an interest in the welfare of this place second to no other man, and in seeing that his own rights are protected he will guard the rights of others. He has an extensive and practical business education which cannot fail to make him one of the foremost members of the County Co[illegible] when the proper time comes Mr. Ham [illegible] not will doubt will do in reference to the billiard question what is right, but it is in no way likely that the proprietor of it will obtain a license from the Council again for the nominal sum of $10.

LITERARY SOCIETY.—Last Friday evening the Literary Society was treated to a lecture on "Light" by Mr. F. Miller, B.A. In a concise way Mr. Miller stated the two great theories held by philosophers, the mode of finding the rate at which light travels and the sources of light, but said that the cause of the light of the sun was unknown. He illustrated several important points in optics by means of drawings, and finally wound up by answering a number of questions proposed by the audience. Mr. Miller is evidently well acquainted with the subject.

DIVISION COURT.—On Monday last His Honor Judge Wilkison spent some time in settling up some accounts of long standing amongst some people of Newburgh and vicinity.

Mr. Hough moved, seconded by Mr. Vandervoort, that the petition of Charles N. AMATEUR THEATRICALS AT BATH.

A few weeks ago some of the young people of this place met and organized a Dramatic Club, with Mr. E. G. Ferren as manager and Mr. A. Martyn as Sec.-Treas. On the evening of the 26th ult. the club played the fairy tale drama, "Cinderella, or, the Glass Slipper," in the town hall. The magnificent display on the stage surpassed anything ever seen in this place. The hall was filled at an early hour, and the curtain rose at eight, disclosing the stage, which was tastefully furnished and arranged. Following is a list of the dramatis personæ :—

Lord Easygoing, an old man, childish and henpecked.....Mr. W. Fraser.
Lady Disdain, his wife.....Mrs. E. G. Ferren.
Cinderella, his daughter.....Miss May Wemp.
Charlotte } Lady Disdain's daughters, Miss Hogle
Annabelle } Mrs. Kennedy.
Prince Amour.....Mr. J. M. Wemp.
Grimalda, Cinderella's godmother, an old fairy.....Mrs. T. Seaward.
Prince Amour's parents, Mr. A. Martyn. Miss Edna Hogle.
Herald Tim, the royal herald.....Mr. T. A. Seward.
Courtiers, Mrs. Max Robinson, Miss Mata Roblin, and Messrs. C. Cummins, C. Wemp, Max Robinson and Allan Wemp.

Miss Mary Wemp as Cinderella in scene I. appeared on the stage in a loose tattered dress of sprigged muslin, patched in various places, and with a cotton handkerchief covering her hair. In scene III. as a foreign princess she excited the admiration of all by the naturalness and graceful ease with which she enacted her part. The transformation from "drudge" to "princess" was indeed complete. The tattered dress disappeared in an instant when touched by the fairy wand, and in its stead was seen a lovely ball-dress of white tissue, with ample trailing draperies. Her face was concealed by a veil fastened to a coronet of pearls. Pearl necklace.

The part of Lady Disdain was admirably sustained by Mrs. E. Gautier Ferren, who certainly possesses dramatic talent of a high order. In the first scene she appeared richly attired in garnet satin, trimmed with pompons and marabout feathers, and in lace cap. Ornaments, rubies. In scene III., at Prince Amour's ball, she was elegantly dressed in a mauve silk petticoat, with pink bodice, train beautifully trimmed with silver lace and crescents. Head-dress of plumes. Silver ornaments.

Miss Annie Hogle, as the daughter of Lady Disdain, appeared in scene I. in a dress of fine texture and color, lace head-dress and golden ornaments. In scene III. in her costume of rich green brocaded satin with train lavishly trimmed with stars of burnished gold, she presented an exceedingly handsome and dignified appearance.

The other daughter of Lady Disdain was personated by Mrs. Alex. Kennedy, who undoubtedly enacted her part with great success. In scene I. she was dressed in a handsome black silk skirt, black velvet bodice, lace collar, lace cap and golden ornaments. At the ball, Mrs. Kenne-

with ample trailing draperies. Her face was concealed by a veil fastened to a coronet of pearls. Pearl necklace.

The part of Lady Disdain was admirably sustained by Mrs. E. Gautier Ferren, who certainly possesses dramatic talent of a high order. In the first scene she appeared richly attired in garnet satin, trimmed with pompons and marabout feathers, and in lace cap. Ornaments, rubies. In scene III., at Prince Amour's ball, she was elegantly dressed in a mauve silk petticoat, with pink bodice, train beautifully trimmed with silver lace and crescents. Head-dress of plumes. Miss Annie Hogle, as the daughter of Lady Disdain, appeared in scene I. in a dress of fine texture and color, lace head-dress and golden ornaments. In scene III. in her costume of rich green brocaded satin with train lavishly trimmed with stars of burnished gold, she presented an exceedingly handsome and dignified appearance.

The other daughter of Lady Disdain was personated by Mrs. Alex. Kennedy, who undoubtedly enacted her part with great success. In scene I. she was dressed in a handsome black silk skirt, black velvet bodice, lace collar, lace cap and golden ornaments. At the ball, Mrs. Kennedy appeared in a blue silk petticoat with train, pale blue bodice, with white satin vest, trimmed with old lace and small golden stars; long white silk gloves, with powdered hair, gold and diamond ornaments.

Great credit is due Mrs. T. A. Seaward for the charming manner in which she played the fairy. Her costume, though differing from the rest, as a fairy costume should, was very appropriate. The character was well sustained throughout, and the fairy at the prince's ball attracted considerable attention.

Miss Edna Hogle, the queen, was handsomely dressed in terra cotta silk, trimmed with swan's down. Over this was thrown a mantle of pink brocaded silk, trimmed with swan's down. She wore a silver crown set with torquoise and garnets, fastened to which was a veil of tulle. In her role she could hardly be surpassed. The dignity, self possession and unassuming grace which marked every movement proved that she was well fitted for the part she enacted. The queen seated upon a high throne beside the king, in the third and fourth scenes, with the courtiers bowing before them and conversing gayly in groups, made a picture of splendor and beauty which will not soon be forgotten.

Mrs. Max Robinson, lady-in-waiting on the Queen, was handsomely attired in a black brocaded satin petticoat with train, pale pink brocaded satin bodice, very neatly and prettily trimmed with exquisite, which was very becoming. Ornaments, old gold and pearls.

Miss Mata Roblin was beautifully dressed in myrtle-green brocaded satin, pink chenille fichu and roses. Gold ornaments.

The gentlemen exhibited considerable dramatic talent. To see the highly creditable manner in which Messrs. Wemp, Fraser and Seaward performed a critical observer would conclude that they were professionals. Mr. J. H. Wemp as the ardent and chivalrous Prince Amour made a decided hit. Lord Easy-going and Bully Tin were also well personated by Mr. Fraser and Mr. Seaward, and their appearance on the stage was a signal for long-continued applause.

The entertainment concluded with an amusing farce, "The Phantom," in which the following persons took part:—Mrs. Max Robinson, Miss Mata Roblin, and Messrs. Max Robinson, A. Wemp and O. Bale.

The Dramatic Club of Bath intend to give an entertainment in Stella Town Hall Tuesday evening, 8th inst.

A SPORTSMAN'S DEFENCE.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—Allow me through your columns to reply to an article written by a Mr. C. Scanlin in the Napanee Beaver, Dec. 15th, 1883. This untruthful intruder arrived here Nov. 7th, a perfect stranger, and wanted to accompany me on my annual hunt; and as I had made my arrangements previously, and had heard of Mr. C.'s character the night he arrived from a young man hailing from his own township, who pronounced him the meanest and most miserly man in the County; such an introduction was quite sufficient. He claimed to be one of the party, but in reality he was an intruder. He acknowledges that he does not belong to any hunting club, therefore such a man is not worthy to be called a sportsman.

He also states that he could not recommend any person to come to me for the pleasure of sport. I do not want such a man's recommendation, as he is not truthful in his attempt to mislead the public by writing such fabrications which appear to be his natural propensity, for he asserts that he killed a bear and a deer, which the accompanying letter, signed by parties who were present, emphatically contradicts. I am also prepared to meet this person any time or place and to prove to the public, by his own friends, his false assertions which were so little called for through the press. Mr. C. S., as a marksman, is a rank failure, he having one day fired five times at a deer under the most favorable circumstances without effect, as can be proved by the party that were present, and which he also acknowledged. This so humiliated him that he left in disgust and gave his Winchester rifle in charge of a friend likely to make better use of it, saying at the same time he never would return.

Any one wanting a Winchester rifle might find it to their advantage to correspond with Charles Scanlin, Marysville P. O.

Again, in referring to Mr. C. S.'s penuriousness, Mr. Potter, of this village, can bear testimony to his ungentlemanly behaviour towards him when here, and wishes to make it known.

And now, in conclusion, I would advise Mr. C. S. for the future not to romance or try to take to himself credit which belongs to others.

Respectfully,
T. BLATE.

COPY OF LETTER ABOVE REFERRED TO.

T. BLATE, Esq.—

Dear Sir,—Your letter has just come to hand, in which you expressed a wish that I would make a statement of the particulars of the result of our hunt at Yake's Lake last fall. Well, sir, to begin, the party consisted of yourself as captain, John Drain, A. Sharp, A. Shareden and C. Armstrong. In three days we killed five deer and one bear, three of the deer being shot by yourself, one by A. Shareden and one by C. Armstrong. In killing the bear we were annoyed by a greenhorn by the name of Scanlin who came in the day before we left with a rifle and a small jug of whiskey. He asked to be allowed to see the bear killed, the bear having been previously found in a den. As soon as the bear came out, this Scanlin commenced firing, and either through fear or excitement came near shooting two of the party. However, sir, you soon fixed his business.

We, the undersigned, do hereby certify that the above statement is in every way correct.
